(4) Modification of Power — Impairment of Obligation of Contracts. — A general statutory power to mortgage its property, conferred upon a railway company, is not protected by the provision of the Federal Constitution prohibiting the impairment of the obligation of contracts, before the power has been exercised; and prior to the exercise of such power, the terms and conditions under which it may be exercised are subject to legislative control. Therefore, the law in force when a railway mortgage is executed, with all the conditions and limitations which it imposes, is the law which determines the force and effect of the mortgage.⁵

2. Requisites and Validity of Mortgage — a. IN GENERAL. — The execution of railway mortgages is, of course, in the absence of statutory provisions upon the subject, regulated by the general rules relating to the execution of other mortgages.⁶ When a mortgage has not been executed with the formalities necessary to give it validity as a legal mortgage, the principles of equitable mortgages⁷ have been applied so as to sustain in equity railway mortgages insufficient as legal mortgages.⁸

b. BY WHOM MORTGAGE TO BE EXECUTED. — A railway company, like other corporations, can act only through its officers and agents, and the general rules heretofore treated with regard to the powers of the officers and agents of private corporations apply, of course, to the execution of railway mortgages.⁹ Reference is made to the notes for cases involving the question of the power of particular officers of railway companies to execute mortgages.¹⁰

3. Future-acquired Property. — Dunham v. Earl, 16 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 45, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,149; New Orleans Pac. R. Co. v. Parker, 33 Fed. Rep. 693, affirmed 143 U. S. 42; Baker v. See also infra, this section, Property Covered by Mortgage.

Sometimes the power to mortgage future-acquired property is expressly conferred upon railway companies. See Central Trust Co. v. Chattanooga, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A.) 94 Fed. Rep. 275; Georgia Southern, etc., R. Co. v. Mercantile Trust, etc., Co., 94 Ga. 306, 47 Am. St. Rep. 153; Quincy v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 94 Ill. 537; Covington v. 4. Purpose of Mortgage. — Gloninger v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 139 Pa. St. 13; Grand Junction R. Co. v. Bickford, 23 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 302.

Thus a provision in a charter that the railway company may mortgage its property to complete the railway gives no power to mortgage the road for other purposes after its completion. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Frazier, 139 U. S. 288, affirming 88 Tenn. 138, 40 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 358.

Consent of Stockholders. — Where a statute required the consent of two-thirds or other portion of the stockholders before a mortgage could be executed, a mortgage executed with the consent of the directors of the company, who owned practically all the stock of the corporation, has been sustained as valid.¹

c. TO WHOM MORTGAGE MAY BE EXECUTED. — The question as to whom a railway mortgage may be executed is, of course, as in the case of other mortgages, dependent upon the mortgagee's power to acquire an interest in the mortgaged property.² Railway mortgages are usually executed to a trustee for the benefit of the holders of the bonds or other evidence of the indebtedness secured thereby;³ and it has been held that no rule of public policy forbids the execution of a railway mortgage to a foreign trust company as trustee.⁴ The fact that the mortgagee is an officer or agent of the railway corporation does not necessarily render the mortgage invalid.⁵

d. FRAUDULENT MORTGAGES. — Though a provision in an ordinary mortgage under which the mortgagor is empowered to dispose of the mortgaged property at his pleasure may render the mortgage invalid as in fraud of creditors,⁶ still the provision in a railway mortgage that nothing therein should prevent the railroad company, before the default in the payment of the indebtedness secured, from selling or disposing of any of the mortgaged property not necessary in its judgment for the use of the railway, has been held not to render the mortgage fraudulent.⁷

Mortgage to Secure Future Issue of Bonds. — Railway mortgages are generally issued to secure bonds thereafter to be issued,⁸ and it has been held that such a mortgage is not within a general statute prohibiting mortgages to secure future advances.⁹

e. STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS AND RESTRICTIONS — (1) In General. — General statutory requirements and restrictions relating to the execution of mortgages have been held applicable to railway mortgages. Thus a general statute rendering invalid mortgages of land situated in several counties has been held to render invalid a railway mortgage including a railway and other realty situated in more than one county.¹⁰ Provisions relating to the acknowledgment of mortgages have also been held to apply to railway mortgages.¹¹ mortgages of both real¹ and personal property² have been held, in the absence of statutory exception, to apply to railway mortgages.

Unrecorded Mortgages. — While an unrecorded railway mortgage is valid as between the parties³ and as against third persons who have actual knowledge of the mortgage,⁴ or purchasers who do not pay a valuable consideration,⁵ it is invalid as regards the persons for whose protection the recording acts are intended, such as attachment and execution creditors of the railway company and subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith.⁶

Mortgage Covering Both Realty and Personality. — By the great weight of authority a mortgage upon the rolling stock of a corporation is considered as a mortgage of personal property and should be recorded as a chattel mortgage; and when the mortgage covers both the railroad property and other real estate, and also the rolling stock, it must be recorded as a real-estate mortgage as regards the former class of property, and as a chattel mortgage as regards the latter.⁷ Though in some cases it has been held that rolling stock is a part of the railroad and covered by a mortgage thereof, so that if the mortgage is recorded as a real-estate mortgage it is sufficient.⁸

Statutory Provisions. — In some jurisdictions the statutes now expressly provide that railway mortgages shall not be subject to the provisions of the general statute requiring the recording of mortgages,¹ and instead provide a special manner in which they are to be recorded.² While such statutes apply to mortgages executed prior to this enactment,³ still they have no retroactive effect so as to defeat the prior attaching rights of third persons.⁴ Where the statutes expressly provide the manner in which railway mortgages shall be recorded, a subsequent act relating to the recording of mortgages generally has been held not impliedly to repeal the former statute relating to railway mortgages so as to bring such mortgages within the provisions of the latter act.⁵

(3) Affidavit of Good Faith. — The general state statutes requiring a mortgage of chattels to be accompanied by an affidavit of the mortgagor that it is made in good faith, and without any design to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, have been held to apply to railway mortgages which include personal property,⁶ though in some cases where specific statutory provision is made for railway mortgages it has been held that such general provisions are not applicable thereto.⁷

3. General Construction of Provisions in Railway Mortgages and Bonds — a. IN GENERAL. — The general rules relating to the construction and interpretation of contracts apply, of course, to the stipulations contained in railway mortgages and bonds.⁸ There are, however, several special provisions and stipulations frequently inserted in railway bonds and mortgages which require treatment in this title. The railway mortgage and the bond secured thereby are, as a general rule, to be construed together,⁹ and where there is a discrepancy between the terms of the bond and of the mortgage, the terms of the bond should control, that being the principal thing containing the obligation of the railway company and the mortgage being a mere security to insure the performance of the obligation.¹⁰

b. PROVISION FOR APPLICATION OF PROCEEDS OF BONDS SECURED BY MORTGAGE. — A stipulation of the manner in which the bonds secured by the mortgage or their proceeds shall be used is frequently found in railway mortgages;¹¹ and it has been held that where the agreement requires the railway company to apply the proceeds of the mortgage bonds to the betterment of the mortgaged property, such proceeds are impressed with a trust requiring

The mere fact that the purchasers of railway-mortgage bonds purchased them under the belief that the proceeds were to be used for the improvement of the mortgaged property and that the directors of the railway company had knowledge of such belief on the part of the purchasers, does not bind the railway company to use the bonds for such purpose. Ives v. Smith, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 645.

c. PROVISION FOR CONVERSION OF BONDS INTO STOCK. — In the issue of railway-mortgage bonds a provision for their conversion into stock of the railway company at the option of the bondholders is frequently inserted.² Where the time within which the bondholder shall exercise his option to convert his bond into stock is expressly limited, such stipulation is of the essence of the contract, and the option must be exercised at the stipulated time.³

Demand and Tender. — Where the exercise of the option is to be made by a demand accompanied with a tender of the bonds for surrender, an actual tender will, of course, as a general rule, be essential to a valid exercise of the option;⁴ but if, on demand for conversion, the officers of the railway company absolutely refuse the demand on the ground that it is too late, they cannot subsequently base their refusal on the ground that a tender of the bonds did not accompany the demand, as by the absolute refusal the company waived the necessity of such tender.⁵

Specific Performance. — Though in a proper case a court of equity may specifically enforce the contract of the railway company to convert bonds into stock, still it should not do this by compelling the company to issue stock for the bond when such method would cause an illegal increase of stock.⁶

4. Property Covered by Mortgage — a. IN GENERAL. — In construing a railway mortgage with regard to the property covered thereby, of course the Following Proceeds in Hands of Third Persons. — It has been held that where the railway company has actually broken its agreement as to the stipulated use of the money, and has parted with the money to third persons, the remedy of the mortgage bondholders is by an action for a breach of contract. The money so diverted by the railway company cannot be followed in the hands of such third persons as a trust fund. Banque Franco-Egyptienne v. Brown, 34 Fed. Rep. 162.

Waiver. — Such a stipulation is for the benefit of the bondholders and may be waived by them, and where the stipulation has been so waived, a subsequent purchaser of bonds, with notice of the waiver, is bound thereby. Belden v. Burke, 147 N. Y. 542, reversing 72 Hun (N. Y.) 51.

Lien. — A provision that the proceeds of the bonds secured thereby should be used in the construction or improvement of the railway property does not give a lien on such proceeds to a third person making such improvement under contract with the railway company. *Dillon v. Extension of Time of Payment of Bond. — Where, by the terms of a railroad bond, a period was fixed within which it might be converted into stock at the option of the holder, it was held that an agreement for the extension of time of payment before the maturity of the bond did not extend the right of conversion after the time limited. Muhlenberg v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 47 Pa. St. 16.

Bonds Maturing on Sunday. — Where the bonds were convertible into stock "at or before maturity," and the bonds matured on Sunday, it was held that an offer of the bonds for conversion into stock on the following Monday was too late; though in such a case where the bonds were presented at a reasonable hour on the Saturday before maturity, the presentation was held sufficient. Chaffee v. Middlesex R. Co., 146 Mass. 224.

Where There Was No Limit Expressed in the Bond as to the time within which the election to convert them into stock should be exercised, it has been held that it was too late to exercise such election several months after their maturity and after the railway company had made a deposit of money for their payment at the designated place of payment. Loomis v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 102 Fed. Rep. 233, 42 C. C. A. 290.

b. GENERAL AND SPECIFIC DESCRIPTIONS.—Where a railway mortgage first describes the property conveyed by a general description, such as "all the property" of the railway company, and this general description is subsequently qualified or followed by a particular description enumerating the property, the general description will usually be controlled by such subsequent specific description;² though this rule of construction always yields to the intention of the parties to be gathered from the context and general scope of the whole mortgage.³ When the particular description is preceded by the word "including," this does not indicate a restrictive intention, but rather the contrary,⁴ and where the rule of restriction has been applied it will usually be found that the particular description was introduced by a videlicet or some other manifestation of the intention to restrain the general description.⁵

c. "RAILROAD."—The term "railroad," as ordinarily used in railway mortgages, should not be confined to the track, or to the land simply necessary to lay the track upon.⁶ In its broadest sense it has been ruled to be very comprehensive and to include the franchise to operate, easement or right of way, roadbed, superstructures, materials, depot buildings, turnouts, rolling stock, shops, tools, and all other property, real and personal, owned and used in connection with the road or its operation.⁷ The term does not, however, include lands other than the roadway or other personal property when such lands or property are not used in the operation of the railroad.⁸

d. "FRANCHISES."—A mortgage by a railway company of all its "corporate franchises" does not include its lands used independently of the operation of the railroad;⁹ but it seems that when land owned by a railway company becomes subject to the franchise to operate the railroad by subordination to it as essential or proper for its operation, it becomes incorporated with it and will be included in a mortgage of the company's corporate franchise.¹⁰ A general mortgage by a railway company of all of its property, railroad effects, etc., does not include its franchise to exist as a corporation,¹¹ but it does include the franchise to operate the railroad.¹²

to operate only as a transfer of the tolls, unpaid calls, and all that belongs to the company as proprietor of the railway, but not the stock or property belonging to it as a common carrier, and is practically equivalent to a pledge of the net earnings.¹ It does not pass any interest in the lands of the railway company.²

f. "DEPOT." — The term "depot," as used in a railway mortgage, is not limited to a place provided for the convenience of passengers while waiting for the arrival or departure of trains, but includes also buildings used for the receipt and storage of freight which, when received, is to be safely kept until forwarded by the cars of the company or delivered to the owner or consignee.³

g. WHAT INCLUDED UNDER GENERAL TERM "PROPERTY." — A mortgage by a railroad company of all of its "property" has been held not to include aid bonds donated to the company by the state or a municipality,⁴ nor other indebtedness due to it,⁵ nor claims for unpaid subscriptions to its stock,⁶ nor personal contracts or covenants between it and third persons,⁷ nor money on hand or thereafter received.⁸ The term "property" would include leasehold interests acquired by the railway company as lessee,⁹ rolling stock,¹⁰ fuel collected and stored by the company for the use of its engines,¹¹ and office furniture.¹²

Old Materials, such as old rails which have been taken up and replaced by others, still remain subject to the mortgage.¹³

h. APPURTENANCES AND PROPERTY APPERTAINING TO OR FOR USE IN CONNECTION WITH RAILROAD. — Under the term "appurtenances" or "property appertaining thereto" only such property passes as is directly appurtenant to the railroad and is necessary for its maintenance, operation, preservation, and security.¹⁴ The term will not include property acquired simply because it may prove useful to the company and thus facilitate the discharge of its business.¹⁵ On the other hand, land other than that upon

15. Thus, the Interest of a Railroad Company in a Grain Elevator jointly constructed with others not belonging to the company, and situated some distance from its road, does not pass under a railway mortgage as an appurtenance which the track is laid may be appurtenant to a railroad so as to pass under a mortgage of the railroad as lands appurtenant or appertaining thereto.¹ The question whether the property is appurtenant to the railway has been held to be a question of fact, and, when the trial is at law, to be submitted to the jury.²

Necessary for Operation. — Where the mortgage covers all the property "necessary or used for the operation" of the road, property should be regarded as necessary for the road when it is such as the company, in the reasonable exercise of its discretion, considers it best to procure, though the railroad might have been operated without it;³ as in determining whether the land is necessary, the term "necessary" is not to be confined to its most restricted meaning.⁴

Property Used for Operation. — The general description of property real or personal used for or appertaining to the operation of the road has a very wide signification, and includes practically any property identified with the operation of the road.⁵ But to bring property within the description as property "used" or "appropriated" for, or "appertaining" to, the operation of the railroad, it must have been so used or appropriated; it is not sufficient that it was owned by the railway company where it was not used or intended for use in the operation of the road.⁶ So the phrase "property acquired by the company for the purposes of the railroad" will not include town lots outside of the lay-out of the road, purchased by the company for resale.¹

Intended or Designed for Use. — A mortgage covering property "intended to be used" in connection with the railroad includes rails, fishplates, bolts, etc., purchased for the road, but not yet actually used in its construction, or brought upon the right of way of the company.² Similarly, a mortgage covering future-acquired property designed for use in connection with the railroad was held to include lots purchased by the company for railway purposes, though they were subsequently found unsuited for these purposes and resold.³

i. ROLLING STOCK. — A railway mortgage may, of course, expressly cover the rolling stock,⁴ and it has been held that rolling stock would pass under a mortgage of the railroad as a part of the realty.⁵ The better doctrine, however, seems to be that the rolling stock retains its distinctive character of personalty and would not pass as a part of the realty.⁶ In some jurisdictions the statutes expressly provide that the rolling stock of railroads shall be regarded as fixtures, and under such statutes it would pass as part of the railroad.⁷ A mortgage of the railroad with all the toll and revenues thereof has been held to pass the rolling stock which was essential to the production of tolls and revenues.⁸

j. INCOME, EARNINGS, AND PROFITS. — As a general rule, a railway mortgage does not cover the income, earnings, and profits of the railway while it is operated by the company, but such income and earnings are analogous to the rents and profits in case of ordinary land mortgages,⁹ and are, so long as the railway is operated by the company, the absolute property of the company

Designation of Rolling Stock to Particular Division. — Where the mortgagor of rolling stock of a certain division of a railroad covenants to designate in a certain manner as belonging to that division such a proportion of the whole rolling stock owned by it as the division bears to the entire railway, such mortgage covers only the rolling stock which is designated as belonging to the division named, although the mortgagor has failed to designate the quantity covenanted for. But where rolling stock is purchased for and designated as belonging to a certain division of the railroad, the lien of a mortgage on that division attaches to such rolling stock as against the mortgagor or purchasers at a sale under a subsequent mortgage of the entire railroad who take with notice of the first mortgage, if such stock may otherwise be traced, although the designation is subsequently obliterated. *U. as if the mortgage did not exist, and subject to the claims of the general creditors of the company.¹ Even though the mortgage gives in terms a lien on the profits and income, the whole earnings have been held to belong to the company and to be subject to its control until possession of the mortgaged premises is actually taken by the mortgagee, or something equivalent is done, when provision is made for continued possession by the railway company until default, with power to receive the earnings, income, etc.² Where the mortgagee takes possession of the railroad,³ or makes demand for possession⁴ under provisions therefor, he becomes entitled from such time to the earnings which may be applied to the mortgage debt; and the same is true with regard to the earnings in the hands of a receiver appointed at the instance of the mortgagee in a suit for foreclosure.⁵ A mortgage may expressly cover the net earnings of a railway company so as to require such earnings to be applied to the payment of the indebtedness secured.⁶

k. FUTURE INTERESTS. — A railway mortgage which purports to grant in presenti will not, of course, cover property subsequently acquired by the company.⁷ In pursuance of the rule in equity in regard to mortgages generally, railway mortgages expressly mortgaging future-to-be-acquired property of the company, both real and personal, are valid in equity. The lien of the mortgage will attach in equity immediately upon the acquisition of the future interests,⁸ and will attach not only to future interest to which the company acquires the legal title, but also to that to which it acquires a full equitable title.¹

In Describing the Future-acquired Property which is to be covered by the mortgage it is necessary that there be some certainty in the description, and a mortgage of all property of a railroad company to be acquired in the future has been held to be insufficient in so far as regards future-acquired property which is in no way appurtenant to the operation of the railroad.²

Consolidation of Railway Companies. — A mortgage containing an after-acquired-property clause covers, of course, only property acquired by the mortgagor, and where the mortgagor is merged by consolidation into another company, its prior mortgage will not cover property afterwards acquired by the consolidated company.³

5. Indebtedness Secured by Mortgage. — The question as to the indebtedness secured by a railway mortgage is, of course, dependent upon the terms of the mortgage.⁴

Property Acquired under Extension of Charter Powers. — Where, after a general mortgage containing an after-acquired-property clause was executed, the charter powers of the company were extended so as to authorize it to acquire property which it had no authority to acquire at the time of the execution of the mortgage, it has been held that the property thus afterwards acquired would not be included in the mortgage as after-acquired property, as it could not have been in contemplation when the mortgage was executed. *Meyer v. has priority over all pre-existing¹ or subsequent general creditors² of the company. Leases by the railway company of the property after the execution of a mortgage are, of course, subject to the mortgage, the lease being terminated by a foreclosure.³ On the other hand, the lien is inferior to all liens upon the property covered by the mortgage existing at the time of its execution.⁴

b. PRIORITY BETWEEN SUCCESSIVE MORTGAGES. — As between successive mortgages, the first in time has, of course, priority;⁵ and the fact that a part of the railway is built entirely with the money raised by a later mortgage gives to the latter no priority over the earlier mortgage, even as to the part of the road so built.⁶ When a first mortgage is given to secure an issue of bonds for a specified amount, and while some of such bonds remain unissued

Money Borrowed to Pay Interest on Bonds. — A claim for money borrowed to pay interest on the bonds secured by a railway company is not entitled to priority over the principal of the bonds, though the necessity for borrowing such money was caused by the application of the current income to the purchase of rolling-stock which became subject to the mortgage through an after-acquired-property clause. *Contracting, etc., Co. v. or undisposed of a second mortgage is executed, the holders of such bonds issued after the execution of the second mortgage still have priority over the indebtedness secured by the second mortgage.¹

c. PRIORITY BETWEEN SAME CLASSES OF BONDHOLDERS. — All the holders of the same issue of bonds secured by the mortgage are on an equal footing as regards the mortgage security, and must share pari passu in the distribution of the proceeds of the mortgaged property.² It has been held that where a mortgage is given to secure a certain number of bonds, and bonds above the designated number are issued, the bonds constituting the overissue will, in the hands of bona fide holders, share equally in the mortgage security with the other bonds.³ Interest coupons are not entitled to priority over the principal or other coupons subsequently maturing,⁴ especially when the mortgage provides that interest coupons and the principal shall share equally in the proceeds of the mortgaged property;⁵ though in the absence of such an express stipulation it has been held that coupons belonging to a class in which a part of the coupons had been paid should be paid before the coupons or principal falling due at a later date,⁶ and that coupons detached and in the hands of others than the holders of the bonds from which they were detached should be paid before such bonds.⁷

f. PRIORITY BETWEEN MORTGAGE AND PREFERRED STOCK. — The lien of a mortgage is superior to a claim of a preferred stockholder.¹⁰

the company has acquired full equitable title to future interests, the mortgage will have priority over liens created by the trustee to secure indebtedness of the railway company prior to the conveyance of the legal title to the company.¹

Judgment Creditors. — Mortgages by railway companies of future-acquired property have precedence over judgment creditors.²

Extent of Lien. — The lien of the mortgage upon future-acquired interests attaches only to such interests in future acquisitions as the railway company itself acquires,³ and is inferior to liens which attach to the property at the time of its acquisition by the company.⁴

Conditional Sale. — When property is sold to a railway company on conditional sale, the title being retained by the seller until the purchase money is paid, the rights of the seller are superior to the general mortgage of future interests;⁵ and the failure of the conditional seller to record the contract, under the statutes requiring such sales to be recorded, does not give priority to the general mortgage over the interest of the conditional vendor;⁶ and in such a case, the subsequent possession of the property so conditionally sold by the mortgagee, or by a receiver in proceedings to foreclose the mortgage, adds nothing to the title of the mortgagee.⁷ The lien of the mortgage

In Fisk v. Potter, 2 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 138, 2 Keyes (N. Y.) 64, it was held that where a stockholder of a company who has acted as agent of the company in acquiring title to lands conveys land to the company after it has executed and recorded a mortgage of all of its lands which it then owned or might thereafter acquire, to secure its bondholders, he must be deemed to have waived a vendor's lien on the land conveyed.

A Purchase-money Mortgage or lien attaching to future-acquired real or personal property at the time of its acquisition by the railway company is superior to the lien of the railway mortgage expressly covering future-acquired interests of the company, and a failure to register or record such purchase-money mortgage does not prevent it from being superior to the prior general mortgage of future interests. Unpaid Instalments. — The mortgage has, however, priority over unpaid instalments on such conditional sale, in so far as regards the general property of the company, as the conditional seller, in reference to his claim for such unpaid instalments and its enforcement against the general property, occupies merely attaches to the property conditionally sold, subject to the rights of the conditional vendor, and such lien cannot be displaced by the railway company and the vendor without the mortgagee's consent.¹

Bona Fide Purchasers Without Notice of future-acquired interests will be protected against the lien of the mortgage claimed under the future-interest clause.²

h. CLAIMS ARISING OUT OF PROCUREMENT OF RIGHT OF WAY. — The claim of an abutting landowner for damages arising out of the construction of the railway, or for compensation for property actually taken, is prior to a mortgage given by the railway company before the damages were assessed and paid,³ and the fact that the claimant did not seek to restrain the construction of the railway until his claim was paid does not deprive such claim of priority over the mortgage.⁴ So persons who convey a right of way directly to a railroad company are entitled to a lien for the purchase price which is prior to a mortgage upon the railroad.⁵ A person, however, who merely loans or advances the money for the purchase of the right of way acquires no lien to which priority over a mortgage upon the railroad can be given.⁶

i. CLAIMS FOR ORIGINAL CONSTRUCTION. — In the absence of statutory provision, the lien of a railway mortgage has priority over claims for the original construction of the railroad, though it was constructed after the execution of the mortgage.⁷ When a lien is given by statute to laborers, materialmen, contractors, etc., for claims arising out of the construction of railroads, and such claims are not expressly made superior to pre-existing mortgages, the mortgages will have precedence over such liens.⁸ In some juris-

Arrears of Rentals. — A turnpike company, by a contract in the form of a deed, executed and recorded, agreed that a railroad company might use a certain portion of its road for a right of way for a certain stipulated annual rental; but no specific lien was reserved, and afterwards the railroad company became insolvent while in arrears for such rent. It was held that a claim therefor did not constitute a lien on the road as against subsequent mortgagees. Baltimore, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Moale, 71 Md. 353.

dictions, liens arising out of the original construction of the railway are given by statute in favor of contractors, laborers, and materialmen, which are entitled to priority over the lien of a mortgage upon the railroad executed before the construction of the road.¹

j. OPERATING EXPENSES. — In some jurisdictions priority over a pre-existing mortgage is given to claims for services rendered or materials furnished for the operation of the road, in so far as the rolling stock of the railroad is covered by the mortgage;² but where the statute giving liens for labor and materials in the repair of a completed railroad does not provide with regard to the priority of such lien and that of an existing mortgage, the lien of the mortgage has priority.³

k. CLAIMS ARISING OUT OF TORTS IN OPERATING RAILROAD. — Claims for damages for negligence in the operation of the railway while in the hands of the company, whether for personal injuries or injuries to property, have no priority, in the absence of statutory provision, over the lien of a pre-existing mortgage;⁴ and as the mortgagee is entitled to the income from the operation of the railway after the appointment of a receiver for the foreclosure of the mortgage, such claims for injuries received prior to the appointment of the receiver are not entitled to any priority over the mortgage debt as to the income accruing after the receiver's appointment.⁵ Still, as regards claims for injuries caused by the negligent operation of the railway while in the hands of the receivers, it has been held that they are to be paid out of the income earned by the receiver in the operation of the railway, in preference to the mortgage indebtedness,⁶ but not out of the proceeds of the sale

Where the Mortgage Covers the Income of the railway company, and in proceedings to foreclose the mortgage a receiver is appointed, and the income accruing prior to the appointment of the receiver is paid over to him by the company, it does not seem that a claim for personal injuries arising while the road was operated by the company would have priority over the mortgage as to the income so paid to the receiver. *Farmers' L. & T. of the property covered by the mortgage.¹

Statutes. — By statute, in some jurisdictions, priority over the mortgage indebtedness is given to claims against railways for torts committed prior to or at the time of the execution of the mortgage,² while in others, priority over the mortgage is given in favor of claims for torts committed either before or after the execution of the mortgage.³ While these latter statutes are undoubtedly constitutional as regards mortgages executed after their passage,⁴ they are, in so far as they apply to mortgages executed prior to their enactment, invalid as impairing the obligation of the contract between the railway company and its mortgagee.⁵

I. EQUITIES IN CASE OF APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER — (1) Claims Arising Prior to Receivership — (a) In General. — General Creditors of the railway company whose claims do not fall within the category of operating expenses have no preference to payment from the income earned by the receiver as against the mortgage creditors at whose instance he was appointed,⁶ or from the earnings prior to his appointment which were voluntarily paid over to him by the railway company and which were covered by the mortgage,⁷ and a fortiori have no prior right to payment from the proceeds of the mortgaged property.⁸

Operating Expenses. — Where a court of chancery is asked by railroad mortgagees to appoint a receiver of the mortgaged property pending foreclosure proceedings, the rule seems to be settled that the income earned by the receiver from the operation of the road should be applied, as against any claim

Code Iowa (1873), § 1309 (Code 1897, § 2075), making judgments for personal injuries prior to the liens of mortgages and trust deeds, cannot be extended to embrace claims for such injuries, even though actions therefor be pending, and the purchaser of a railroad on foreclosure of mortgage takes it free from such claims unless they have been prosecuted to judgment. *Burlington, etc., R. So it has been held that the Tennessee statute (M. & V. Code 1884, § 1271; Annot. Code 1896, § 1530) providing that railroad companies shall not have power to give mortgages which shall be valid against judgments for damages to persons or property arising out of the operation of the road does not give a lien upon the road for such damages, and that the purchaser of the road on foreclosure of the mortgage would take free from all claims for such damages where no lien therefor had been procured by legal proceedings. *Baltimore Trust, etc., Co. v. of the mortgagees, to the payment of expenses incurred by the company in the operation of the road while in its possession;¹ and the court may even direct such expenses to be paid out of the corpus of the mortgaged property.² As a general rule, however, expenses incurred by the railway company in the operation of its railway are not entitled to priority over the mortgage as regards the corpus of the mortgaged property or the proceeds thereof on foreclosure sales, where there has been no diversion of the current income in favor of the mortgage creditors at the expense of the operating-expense creditors.³

Six Months' Rule. — In determining whether the operating expense in question should be paid from the income earned by the receiver, the courts have adopted the general rule that the income should be so applied where the expenses were incurred within six months of the appointment of the receiver,⁴ and that it should not be so applied if the indebtedness was incurred more than six months before his appointment.⁵ This, however, is not a hard and fast rule, and under the particular circumstances of the case the court may, in its discretion, direct such income to be applied to indebtedness for operating expenses incurred more than six months before the receiver was appointed.¹

(b) What Constitute Operating Expenses. — Claims constituting operating expenses so as to entitle them to preferential rights when a receiver is appointed in the foreclosure of a mortgage have been said to include all claims necessarily incurred in the ordinary administration of the affairs of the railway company,² such as amounts due to connecting carriers for ticket and freight balances,³ wages of employees of all grades,⁴ attorneys' fees for necessary legal services,⁵ and claims for operating supplies such as fuel and materials for necessary repairs;⁶ but not claims for money loaned to the railway company,⁷ claims for materials and labor furnished for original construction,⁸ accrued rentals on leased lines and terminal facilities,⁹ instalments accrued on conditional or absolute sales of rolling stock and locomotives,¹⁰ claims for rental

(c) Diversion of Income. — The current income derived from the operation of the railway while in the hands of the company should, in equity, be applied to pay the current operating expenses,³ and it has been held that where such income, instead of being so applied, is used for the payment of the interest or principal of the mortgage indebtedness, or in the procurement of new equipment, or in making lasting improvements which inure to the benefit of the mortgage security, the court may and should direct the income in the hands of the receiver, or even the proceeds of the mortgaged property, to be applied, to the extent of such diversion of the income, to the payment of such operating expenses, in preference to the payment of the mortgage indebtedness.⁴

(2) Claims Arising under Receivership — General Rule. — The income earned by the receiver should always be applied to the payment of the expenses of the operation of the railroad incurred by him, rather than to the mortgage indebtedness,⁵ and where such income is diverted to the betterment of the railroad and the consequent advancement of the mortgage security, the proceeds of the foreclosure sale to the extent of such diversion may be applied to the payment of claims for operating expenses incurred by the receiver.⁶

Where Income Insufficient. — If the income accruing to the receiver in the operation of the railroad is insufficient to pay the necessary expenses incurred

Where the Receiver Has Diverted the Current Income received by him to the betterment and increase of the property covered by the mortgage, instead of applying such income to the payment of operating expenses incurred prior to his appointment, it has been held that the claims for such expenses would be entitled to priority over the mortgage and would constitute in equity a lien on the property. The Company May Apply Surplus Current Earnings, after the payment of all current operating expenses, to the payment of the interest on the mortgage indebtedness and the improvement and better equipment of the railway without constituting a diversion of such income so as to give rise to equities in favor of subsequent operating-expense creditors, as against the mortgage creditors. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 125 U. S. 658.

Where Supplies Are Furnished to the Company on Long Credit, thereby showing that it was the intention of the parties that current income during such credit should be applied to the payment of interest on outstanding mortgage bonds, an application of such earnings to the payment of interest is not a diversion so as to entitle the supply creditors to a preference as against the mortgage bondholders. Bound v. South Carolina R. Co., (C. C. A.) 58 Fed. Rep. 473.

The Burden of Showing a Diversion by the company of current income from the payment of current operating expenses is upon the party asserting such diversion. Kansas L. & T. Co. v. Electric R., etc., Co., 108 Fed. Rep. 702.

by him under sanction of the court in the preservation, management, and operation of the railroad, such expense may be made chargeable upon the corpus of the mortgaged property and paid out of its proceeds on foreclosure sale.¹ When the receiver is not appointed in the interest of mortgage creditors, but at the instance of third persons whose claims are subject to the mortgage, expenses incurred in the operation of the railroad which the income is insufficient to pay are not necessarily a prior lien on the mortgaged property in preference to the mortgage.²

m. WAIVER AND POSTPONEMENT OF MORTGAGE LIEN BY AGREEMENT. — The creditors or bondholders may, of course, postpone or waive by agreement the priority of their mortgage,³ and this is frequently done by the surrender of the bonds secured by the mortgage and the acceptance in their stead of bonds secured by a later mortgage.⁴

n. POWER OF LEGISLATURE TO DISPLACE MORTGAGE LIEN. — The legislature has no power, after a railway mortgage has been executed, to displace the lien of the mortgage in favor of other claims against the railway company; such legislation would be unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of the mortgage.⁵

7. Foreclosure — a. SALES UNDER POWER. — Railway mortgages and deeds of trust frequently contain a power of sale to the trustee for the purpose of foreclosing, the general principles relating to deeds of trust and powers of sale applying to such mortgages.⁶

b. FORECLOSURE BY BILL IN EQUITY—(1) When Right to Foreclose Accrues.—The accrual of the right to foreclose, by bill in equity, a railway mortgage depends, of course, upon whether there has been a breach of the condition of the mortgage.¹

Default in Payment.—The usual ground of foreclosure is default in the payment of the indebtedness secured by the mortgage;² and while, as a general rule, a demand for payment is necessary to place the company in default, still a demand may be dispensed with when the company is insolvent and has no funds at the place where the indebtedness is payable.³ Where the indebtedness secured is payable by instalments, the failure to pay an instalment authorizes a foreclosure.⁴

Default in Payment of Interest.—Where the mortgage secures payment of both principal and interest, default in the payment of interest entitles the bondholders to foreclose.⁵ As a general rule, where foreclosure is for nonpayment of interest only, it can be had only for the interest, and no more of the property covered by the mortgage than is sufficient to pay such interest should be sold.⁶ Still, in the case of railway mortgages, the courts, in view of the character of the property and its value only as an entirety, have adopted the rule of allowing the whole property to be sold free of the mortgage, and transferring the lien of the bondholders to the proceeds of the sale, not only for the interest in arrears, but also for the principal of the bonds.⁷

(2) Who May Sue for Foreclosure—(a) Right of Trustee to Foreclose.—The trustee in a railway mortgage or deed of trust is, as a general rule, the proper party to sue for a foreclosure of the mortgage,¹ and the fact that a majority of the bondholders are opposed to the foreclosure does not deprive him of his power to foreclose.²

Bad Faith of Trustee.—Still, a foreclosure suit by the trustee should be stayed at the request of the bondholders when it is shown that he is acting in bad faith, to injure the bondholders and for the benefit of the stockholders of the railway company.³

Payment to Complaining Bondholders.—So when a trustee has commenced a foreclosure suit at the request of some of the bondholders, other bondholders who do not desire a foreclosure may defeat it by paying to all of the bondholders who are seeking a foreclosure the full value of their bonds and the costs of the suit.⁴

Request of Requisite Proportion of Bondholders.—The right of the trustee to foreclose is frequently restricted by a provision in the mortgage that the trustee shall not institute proceedings for foreclosure unless a certain proportion of the bondholders request him to do so, and of course he is bound by such stipulation.⁵

Power of Sale and Provision for Possession by Trustee.—The fact that the mortgage authorizes the trustee on default to take possession of the railway and operate it, and also contains a power of sale, does not deprive him of his right to foreclose by suit in equity;⁶ nor does the fact that he has taken possession

Where the suit is by one bondholder in behalf of himself and all others to foreclose for nonpayment of interest, a foreclosure cannot be arrested by the payment of the interest due to the bondholder by whom the suit is instituted; it must be paid on the other bonds as well. *Van Benthuyzen v. of the railroad and is operating it deprive him of the right to bring a suit for foreclosure.¹

(b) Right of Bondholders to Foreclose. — In case of a railway mortgage or deed of trust to trustees to secure bonds, the bondholders have no absolute right to institute foreclosure proceedings,² though, of course, any bondholder may bring an action or suit for the enforcement of his bond when the proceeding does not involve the enforcement of any security conferred by the mortgage or deed of trust.³ Still, by stipulations and conditions in the bonds and mortgage, the bondholders may, for their mutual protection, restrict the right of a bondholder to sue, even at law, to enforce his bond.⁴

Refusal of Trustee. — It is a well-settled general rule that when the trustee refuses to institute foreclosure proceedings the bondholders secured by the mortgage or deed of trust may institute such proceedings,⁵ but they may agree among themselves that no individual bondholder shall institute foreclosure proceedings unless the trustee has refused to do so after a request from a certain proportion of the bondholders. In such a case an individual bondholder cannot institute foreclosure proceedings unless the refusal of the trustee was upon request of such proportion of the bondholders.⁶

Position of Trustee Antagonistic. — Where the trustee has acquired adverse interests and stands in a position hostile to the bondholders, so that he cannot maintain their interests without attacking his own, the bondholders may themselves sue to foreclose the mortgage.⁷

Death of Trustee — Vacancy in Trusteeship. — Where the trustees have died, or the office of trustee becomes vacant, one or more of the bondholders may institute foreclosure proceedings on behalf of himself and all others.⁸

Provision Ousting Jurisdiction of Courts. — It has also been held that a provision in the mortgage that the mode of foreclosure through the exercise of the power of sale should be exclusive was an attempt to provide against a remedy in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings and to oust the jurisdiction of the courts, and was therefore invalid as against public policy. Guaranty Trust, etc., Co. v. Hudson River West Shore R. Co., 35 Fed. Rep. 3.

Motive of Bondholder Instituting Foreclosure Suit Immaterial. — Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Schmidt, (Ky. 1899) 52 S. W. Rep. 835; McFadden v. Mays Landing, etc., R. Co., 49 N. J. Eq. 176.

Nonresidence of Trustee. — The mere fact that the trustee is a nonresident and without the jurisdiction of the court is not sufficient to entitle bondholders to institute foreclosure proceedings.¹

Pendency of Foreclosure Suit by Trustee. — Where the trustee has, in the first instance, instituted foreclosure proceedings, it seems that during the pendency of such suit an individual bondholder cannot institute an independent foreclosure suit for the protection of his interests, but can be heard only in the pending suit.²

Jurisdiction of Federal Courts. — Where the bondholders suing to foreclose are citizens of a state other than that in which the company was incorporated, the federal courts have jurisdiction of the suit on account of the diverse citizenship of the parties.³

Suit by Some Bondholders on Behalf of All. — Where the bondholders are entitled to institute foreclosure proceedings, and they are so numerous as to render it impossible to make them all parties to the suit, one or more of them may, on behalf of himself and all others, institute the foreclosure suit without making all the others actual parties thereto.⁴

Effect of Opposition by Some of the Bondholders. — When there has been a default in the payment of the mortgage and a foreclosure suit has been instituted by some of the bondholders, it is no defense to such suit that a majority of the bondholders are opposed to the suit,⁵ but the bondholders opposing it should be allowed to stop the proceedings by purchasing the bonds of those desirous of foreclosing.⁶

Intervention by Other Bondholders as Complainants. — Where some bondholders on behalf of themselves and all others institute foreclosure proceedings, the others are entitled to be admitted as complainants so as to enable them to take the necessary steps for the protection of their interests.⁷

(3) Intervention — By Bondholders. — In the foreclosure of railway mortgages the trustee represents the bondholders. The latter are not necessary parties to the foreclosure suit,⁸ and have no right to demand that they be made parties unless the trustee is acting in bad faith or failing to protect their interests.⁹ But if he does act in bad faith and fails to protect their interests,

Successive Mortgages. — If there are several successive mortgages, the trustees of which are dead, a holder of bonds secured by each mortgage may institute proceedings for the foreclosure of all the mortgages on behalf of himself and all of the other bondholders under each mortgage. *Galveston, etc., R. are specified, one bondholder cannot, on behalf of himself and all others, institute foreclosure proceedings without making the other bondholders parties to the suit, so that each may be present to defend his own claims and if necessary attach others, especially when the adequacy of the security is doubtful. *Nashville, etc., R. or stands in a position hostile thereto, the bondholders are entitled to intervene,¹ and a provision in the mortgage that no bondholder shall institute foreclosure proceedings does not, in such a case, deprive them of the right of intervention in a suit instituted by the mortgage trustee.² Where the suit is by one bondholder on behalf of himself and all others, such others may intervene.³

By Stockholders. — The officers of the mortgaged railway company are the proper parties for the protection of the interests of the stockholders of the company, and the stockholders as such have no right to intervene in a foreclosure suit;⁴ but where the officers fraudulently neglect or refuse to protect the interests of the stockholders, the latter should be allowed to intervene for their own protection.⁵

General Creditors of the railway company who have no lien on the mortgaged property have no right to intervene in a suit for the foreclosure of the mortgage.⁶

A Senior Mortgagee has no right to intervene in a suit to foreclose by a junior mortgagee,⁷ nor can a purchaser on foreclosure by the senior mortgagee intervene in a foreclosure suit by the junior mortgagee.⁸

Adverse Claimants. — Persons who claim a title to the mortgaged property in hostility to that of the mortgagor are not entitled to intervene in the foreclosure suit.⁹

Holders of Receivers' Certificates. — Where a receiver is appointed in a suit to foreclose a railway mortgage, the holders of receivers' certificates may intervene in order to enforce payment of their claims from a fund in the hands of the receiver.¹⁰

Purchaser Pendente Lite. — Purchasers of the mortgaged property pending the foreclosure suit should be allowed to intervene to protect their interests.¹¹

State. — The foreclosure of a railway mortgage is not necessarily such a matter of public interest as to entitle the state to intervene to prevent the foreclosure.¹²

(4) Jurisdiction. — The general jurisdiction of courts to foreclose railway mortgages is the same as their jurisdiction to foreclose other mortgages.¹³

Federal Courts. — The federal courts, as in case of other mortgages, have jurisdiction of suits to foreclose railway mortgages.¹

Jurisdiction as Affected by Situs of Property. — Where the mortgaged road lies in several jurisdictions, the courts, both state and federal, have upheld their jurisdiction to decree a foreclosure of a mortgage upon the entire railroad by compelling a transfer of the title by the mortgagor,² or through the agency of the mortgage trustee, in whom is vested a power of sale.³ The effect of a conveyance by the mortgagor or the mortgage trustee as regards the property in the foreign jurisdiction, however, is still a question for the courts of such jurisdictions.⁴ The court has no power, by virtue of its decree or any conveyance thereunder, except through the mortgagor or trustee in whom the title is vested, to foreclose the mortgage so as to affect the title of the mortgagor or other person as regards the part of the railway situated out of its territorial jurisdiction.⁵ Where the railroad extends through several judicial districts or counties in one jurisdiction, the foreclosure suit may be brought and a sale directed by the courts in any of them.⁶

(5) Defenses. — It has been held that in a suit to foreclose negotiable railway bonds in the hands of bona fide purchasers, no other defense can be made than in an action on the bonds themselves;⁷ but when the holders of the bonds cannot claim protection as bona fide holders, a defense which will defeat the recovery of the bonds will defeat a foreclosure of the mortgage or the right of such holders to participate in the proceeds of the foreclosure.⁸

Where the mortgage is given to cover a large number of bonds, the fact that some of them are invalid is no defense to a foreclosure for payment of the others.¹

Pledge. — Where a pledge of railway-mortgage bonds was valid it has been held to be no defense to a foreclosure of the mortgage for their payment that on a foreclosure of the pledge the bonds were sold below their face value.²

Estoppel. — Where a railway company has received the benefit evidenced by railway-mortgage bonds it has been held that it would be estopped to defend a foreclosure by questioning its power to execute the mortgage, or by showing a defective execution of such power.³

A Successor to the Interests of the Company by which the mortgage was executed can interpose no defense to the foreclosure of the mortgage which could not have been interposed by the mortgagor.⁴

(6) Foreclosure Sale — (a) When Sale to Be Ordered — Sale Pendente Lite. — Where the railway company is insolvent, and there are no funds to meet the cost of necessary repairs, and the property is of such a character that it will seriously deteriorate in value pending the litigation as to the validity of the mortgage and the indebtedness secured thereby, it has been held that the court may order a sale pendente lite,⁵ but as a general rule, and unless special circumstances require it, there is no authority to sell the property covered by the mortgage pendente lite except by consent of all persons interested,⁶ though a sale may be ordered before the ownership of the bonds secured by the mortgage has been determined.⁷

Priorities to Be Determined. — Where there is a contest as to the priority between several mortgages, such priorities should, as a rule, be settled before the sale of the property is ordered.⁸

(b) Time of Sale and Adjournments. — The action of the court in fixing the time for the foreclosure sale is largely a matter of discretion. Thus the time to be allowed after the entry of a foreclosure decree for the payment of the railway mortgage is within the discretion of the court.⁹ The master or marshal con-

Subsequent Adjustment. — Cases sometimes, however, arise where a sale of the property out and out and a subsequent adjustment of the conflicting claims upon the fund is the only just method which can be pursued. *Fitzgerald v. Where There Are Conflicting Claims under Two Mortgages to be foreclosed, before such claims are settled, the property may be sold with the consent of the trustees in the two mortgages though some of the bondholders object on the ground that a sale before the conflicting rights are settled would seriously depreciate the property, especially when the earnings of the company in the hands of the receiver are not sufficient to pay the operating expenses and it is depreciating in value. *Cleveland First Nat. ducting the sale has the right to adjourn it if deemed best.¹ Where the sale is made on a day different from that fixed by the court, the court may nevertheless confirm the sale.²

(c) Place of Sale. — In Illinois a foreclosure sale of a railroad conducted out of the state has been upheld,³ and in other jurisdictions as well the general statutory provisions requiring foreclosure sales of mortgaged property to be made in the county in which such property is situated have been held not to apply to mortgages of railroads.⁴

(d) Property to Be Sold. — Of course, only such property is to be sold as is subject to the mortgage.⁵

Sales En Masse or in Parcels. — As the value of a railroad lies in its system as a unit, in the foreclosure of a mortgage covering the entire system the property should, as a rule, be sold as an entirety;⁶ and when the mortgage covers the railroad proper and the rolling stock, they may be sold together though the rolling stock is regarded as personal property.⁷

Divisional Mortgages. — Where the system of a railway is subject to several mortgages covering separate divisions, in the foreclosure of such mortgages the court should not, as a rule, offer a sale of the system as an entirety, and divide the proceeds among the several classes of bondholders according to the value of the several divisions covered by their mortgages, as such a course would to a large extent deprive the bondholders under each mortgage of the right of combining by agreement between themselves in order to protect their security.⁸

(e) Terms of Sale. — The fixing of the terms of the sale is a matter within the discretion of the court, which may, after the term at which the final decree was rendered, modify such terms, though it cannot modify the essential provisions of the decree.⁹

Instances. — If necessary, the court may delay the sale to await a better condition of the finances and business of the country, Duncan v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 4 Hughes (U. S.) 125; and may, pending an appeal from the decree of foreclosure, postpone the sale without a supersedeas, if a sale on the day fixed would be oppressive or unjust, Bound v. South Carolina R. Co., 55 Fed. Rep. 186.

Where the foreclosure suit is for default in the payment of interest, the court is not required to postpone the sale because the condition of the railroad has been increasing in prosperity when it would require many years of such prosperity to pay off the overdue interest. *Duncan v. Upset Price. — The court may fix an upset price.¹

Deposit by Bidders. — In order to prevent "straw" bids and delays, the court may require each bidder to make a deposit.²

(f) Sales Subject to or Free from Liens. — Where there are liens upon the property having priority over the mortgage, on foreclosure of the mortgage the road should, as a rule, be sold subject to such prior liens,³ but where the liens are inferior to the mortgage, the property should be sold free from such liens so as to enable the mortgage bondholders to have the advantage of their entire security.⁴ The court may, where all parties in interest are before it, order a sale of the property free from the liens having priority over the mortgage and transfer such liens to the proceeds of the sale.⁵

(g) Who May Purchase at Sale. — When the state statutes authorize any railroad to become a purchaser, foreign as well as domestic railways are included.⁶ Where there is no fraud or connivance relating to the foreclosure, the president of the mortgagor railroad company may purchase at the sale in his individual capacity without incurring any liability to the mortgage bondholders.⁷ The latter may purchase for themselves,⁸ and irrespective of whether the solicitor of the mortgagor railroad can purchase for himself, he may purchase and take title as the agent of and for the benefit of the bondholders.⁹ The trustee in the mortgage cannot purchase for himself without being liable to account to the bondholders therefor.¹⁰

sold on foreclosure sale have been held not to apply to a foreclosure sale under a railway mortgage covering the roadbed, franchises, and rolling stock, which are to be sold as an entirety.¹

(i) Redemption. — State statutes providing for redemption from judicial sales of real estate where at the sale the property sold does not bring two-thirds of its appraised value do not apply to a foreclosure sale of a railroad, franchise, and rolling stock as an entirety.² The right to redeem from the mortgage when there has been no foreclosure, but the mortgagee has entered into possession, applies, of course, to railway mortgages.³

(j) Restraining Sale. — Persons who are not parties to the foreclosure suit, and who, therefore, cannot be injured by the sale, are not entitled to an injunction restraining the sale.⁴

(k) Vacating Sale. — After a foreclosure sale has been confirmed and a deed of conveyance executed to the purchaser, a bill in equity will lie to vacate the sale on the ground of fraud,⁵ or the validity and fairness of the sale may be questioned on motion for its confirmation;⁶ but after such confirmation and conveyance bondholders have no right to intervene as actual parties to the foreclosure suit and apply for a vacation of the sale.⁷

Laches. — Persons may, of course, be precluded by their laches from the right to have the sale vacated on the ground of fraud.⁸

Inadequacy of Price. — A sale will not be vacated for mere inadequacy of price unless it is so inadequate as to show that it was not the result of fair dealing and an honest purchase.⁹

Combination Among Bidders. — The mere fact that the bondholders combine among themselves to purchase at a sale, when there is no actual fraud, is not ground for vacating the sale.¹⁰

10. Combination Amongst Bidders. — Kropholler

Combination Between Bondholders and Stockholders. — Where the bondholders and stockholders of a mortgagor railway company combine for the purpose of a foreclosure and purchase of the property, so as to cut off the rights of the unsecured creditors of the railway, the sale will be vacated as a fraud on such creditors.¹

(1) Liability on and Enforcement of Bid. — The purchaser at a foreclosure sale makes himself, by his purchase, a quasi party to the foreclosure suit, subject to the jurisdiction of the court for all orders necessary to compel the perfecting of his purchase, and he is entitled to be heard on all rulings affecting his liability on his bid.²

Personal Liability of Purchaser. — The purchasers are, of course, personally liable for the amount of their individual bids, though the property is conveyed directly to a railway company organized by them.³

Purchase by Bondholders — Payment with Bonds. — When the mortgage bondholders purchase the property at the foreclosure, they are entitled, after paying the costs and charges of the litigation and of the trust, to pay the residue of their bid in bonds so far as to cover their own proportion of such residue,⁴ and the foreclosure decree often expressly provides, in case of a purchase by bondholders, for payment of the bid by surrender of the mortgage bonds.⁵

Lien for Amount of Bond. — Where the foreclosure sale is for credit, the court may reserve in the foreclosure decree a lien for the amount of the bid in the nature of a vendor's lien which will be enforced against grantees of the purchaser, as they are bound to take notice of the lien.⁶

(m) General Rights and Liabilities of Purchaser — aa. TITLE ACQUIRED. — The purchaser on foreclosure of the mortgage acquires, as against persons who are not parties to the foreclosure suit, only such title as the railway company and mortgagee held.⁷ Thus, the title of the purchaser is subject to the liens against the mortgaged property prior to the lien of the mortgage foreclosed,⁸ though, of course, liens junior to the mortgage are not enforceable against the purchaser.⁹

cc. LIABILITY OF PURCHASER FOR OBLIGATIONS OF RAILWAY COMPANY. — As a general rule, the purchasers of a railway on the foreclosure sale of the railway mortgage do not incur any liability on the obligations or for the indebtedness of the old company.⁴ The purchaser on the foreclosure may, after the sale, adopt, through his conduct and dealings, a contract entered into by the mortgagor railway company, so as to make such contract his own and thereby render him liable thereon, though he would not have been liable merely through the foreclosure purchase;⁵ and the mortgaged property may be sold under express conditions that the purchaser assume certain obligations of the mortgagor, so that the assumption of such obligations will become a part of the consideration of the purchase and render the purchaser liable on such obligations to the obligee.¹ Where, on the foreclosure of a junior mortgage, the railway is sold subject merely to prior mortgages, the purchaser does not incur any personal liability to pay such mortgages.² The purchasers on foreclosure are, of course, subject to the same liability as the mortgagor railway company in so far as respects its duty to perform quasi-public functions, such as the proper operation of the railway, etc.³

dd. LIABILITY FOR OBLIGATIONS INCURRED BY RECEIVER. — Where, on the foreclosure of a mortgage, a receiver is appointed, a purchaser at the foreclosure sale takes the property, as a general rule, free from indebtedness or obligations incurred by the receiver during the receivership.⁴ The mortgaged property is frequently sold subject to all debts and liabilities of the receivership, so that the purchaser is required to pay such debts and liabilities as a part of the consideration of the purchase.⁵ The burden of proving that the property

ee. WHAT RIGHTS AND INTERESTS PASS TO PURCHASER. — The general question with regard to what property passes to the purchaser depends, of course, upon the terms of the mortgage and of the decree directing the foreclosure sale.⁴

Earnings. — The purchaser at the foreclosure sale is not entitled to the net earnings in the hands of a receiver.⁵

Franchises. — Special privileges or franchises not necessary for the operation of the railway conferred upon the company by charter have been held not to pass to the purchaser on the foreclosure of the mortgage, such as a special privilege as to passenger fare chargeable,⁶ or an exemption from taxation.⁷ So the franchise of the company to exist as a corporation does not pass to the purchaser,⁸ though the statutes now, as a general rule, provide for the manner in which the purchaser may organize as a corporation for the operation of the railway.⁹ Where the mortgage includes the general franchises of the railway company, the franchise to maintain and operate the railway will pass to the purchaser.¹⁰ It has also been held that the franchise of exercising the power of eminent domain passes to the purchaser, though he is an individual.¹¹

8. Trustee — a. POWER TO BIND BONDHOLDERS. — The action of the trustee within the scope of his duties is, of course, in the absence of fraud, binding upon bondholders,¹ and in exercising his trust he may exercise his discretion within the scope of his powers.² The trustees have general power to maintain litigation to protect the security from loss or injury.³ As a general rule, the trustees have no power to modify the terms of the mortgage or deed of trust without the consent of the bondholders.⁴

Notice to Trustees. — The trustee is the representative of the bondholders, and the general rule that notice to the trustee is notice to his cestui que trust applies equally to trustees in railway mortgages.⁵

b. LIABILITY TO BONDHOLDERS FOR NEGLIGENCE. — The trustees are required to act with reasonable diligence in the performance of their duties, and will become personally liable to the bondholders for injuries to them arising from the negligent performance of the duties of the trustees.⁶

c. COMPENSATION AND REIMBURSEMENT. — The trustee is entitled to be reimbursed for all expenditures reasonably incurred in the execution of the trust,⁷ and such expenses are a lien on the mortgaged property, so that he will not be compelled to give up possession of the property until his expenditures have been repaid.⁸ Thus, reasonable fees for counsel,⁹ costs of litigation, and expenses of the repairs and preservation of the property¹⁰ should be allowed to him. He is entitled to receive reasonable compensation for his services.¹¹ railway and operate it for the benefit of the trust,¹ and under such a provision the trustee may take possession and operate the railway in his own name.² He is entitled to hold the earnings received by him while in possession for the purposes of the trust.³ Where the railway company refuses to give possession to the trustee, he will be put in possession by the courts,⁴ and the company will be compelled to account for the earnings received while he was wrongfully kept out of possession.⁵ Where the mortgage trustees take possession of the railway, they stand in place of the corporation and are subject to all the liabilities incidental to the exercise of the franchise and the operation of the road;⁶ or the railway may continue to be responsible for the liabilities incurred by the trustees.⁷ If the trustees continue to operate the railway in the name of the company, they may be sued for liabilities growing out of such operation.⁸ When the trustee has taken possession, he then occupies a fiduciary relation with regard to the company which forbids his speculation for his individual benefit in the bonds secured by the mortgage.⁹

e. REMOVAL OF TRUSTEE AND FILLING VACANCY. — A court of equity has power to remove the trustee in a railway mortgage for sufficient cause and to appoint another in his place.¹⁰

Filling Vacancies. — Railway mortgages sometimes provide for filling vacancies in the office of trustee,¹¹ but in the absence of any provision in the mortgage, a court of equity, in pursuance of its general equity power, may appoint suitable trustees to fill vacancies.¹²

II. BONDS — 1. In General. — Where money is to be raised by a railway company, the usual method is to issue bonds which are secured by mortgage or are by statute made a lien upon the property of the railway company; but in order to make them a lien upon the railway property they must either be secured by mortgage or made a lien by statute.¹³

2. Power to Issue Bonds. — A railway company has power to give a bond for any purpose for which it may lawfully contract a debt, without any special authority to that effect, unless restrained by some provision expressed or implied in its charter, or in some legislative act.¹⁴ It may issue bonds in any

Money or Property Received or Labor Done. — A constitutional provision prohibiting railroad corporations from issuing bonds except for money or property actually received, or labor done, and declaring void all fictitious increase of indebtedness, does not necessarily render the validity of railway bonds dependent upon

payee of a bond given for borrowed money is not bound to see that the money is applied by the officers of the railway company to corporate purposes, and where there is no fraud upon his part, the fact that the money was misappropriated is no defense to a recovery upon the bonds.¹

3. Transfer of Bonds and Rights of Bona Fide Holders — a. TRANSFERS. — Railway bonds payable to a named payee or his assigns are not transferable so as to enable a holder to sue thereon in his own name without an assignment,² but bonds which are payable to bearer are transferable by delivery, so as to enable the holder to sue thereon in his own name.³ So bonds payable in blank, no payee's name being inserted, may be filled up by the holder in his own name and suit be maintained thereon.⁴

bonds negotiable in form are not strictly negotiable by the law merchant, still, bona fide purchasers for value are afforded protection against defenses on behalf of the company which would have been available against the first holder or original payee.¹

Violation of Statute or Charter. — Nor is it any defense, as against a bona fide holder, that the bonds were issued for a greater amount than that allowed by statute;² nor that, in the issuance of the bonds, restrictions imposed by the charter of the railway company on its power to issue bonds were violated;³ nor that the bonds were issued for the construction of a railroad other than that specified in the articles of incorporation;⁴ nor that the bonds were sold by the railway company for less than par, in violation of a statute.⁵

holder, to be entitled to protection as a bona fide holder, must show that he is such; his mere possession of the bonds is insufficient.¹

4. General Requisites and Validity. — In the issuance of railway bonds the statutory requirements in regard thereto should, of course, be complied with; for example, where the statute prescribes the time for which the bonds shall run.²

Authority of Officers. — With respect to the authority of the officers of a railway company to issue bonds, the principles of the law are the same as in the case of any other corporate contract.³

Rate of Interest. — Sometimes the statutes expressly fix a limit to the rate of interest at which companies may borrow money, and, of course, bonds and other evidences of indebtedness for borrowed money may not bear a higher rate of interest than is so allowed;⁴ but the mere fact that a railway bond or note bears a higher rate of interest does not necessarily bring it within such a statute, as it may not have been given for borrowed money, and therefore the statute may not apply.⁵

Delivery. — A delivery of its bonds by the company is essential to their validity as legal obligations.⁶ Thus, railway bonds made complete in form by due execution are not legal obligations so long as they remain in the hands of the company or its agents for issuance or negotiation, and therefore cannot, as property, be taken on attachment, execution, or other process against the company,⁷ but a delivery in pledge to creditors of the company is sufficient to render them valid.⁸

Rates at Which Bonds May Be Negotiated. — In many jurisdictions the statutes regulate the rates at which bonds may be negotiated or sold by railway companies as regards their face or par value,⁹ and when a statute authorizes a

Time of Maturity. — Where the statute authorizing the issue of bonds for borrowed money expressly provides that they are "not to mature at an earlier period than thirty years," a provision that they shall mature at the option of the bondholders in case of nonpayment of interest is invalid, but the bonds will be otherwise good. Howell v. Western R. Co., 94 U. S. 463.

Indorsement by Trustee. — Where bonds on their face expressly provide that they shall not become obligatory until the certificate of the mortgage trustee is indorsed thereon, such certificate is essential to their validity, and if they are stolen from the possession of the railway company and the certificate of the trustee is forged thereon, they will be invalid, even in the hands of a bona fide purchaser. Maas v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 83 N. Y. 223, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 8.

Name of Payee in Blank or Payable to Bearer. — Bonds issued with the name of the payee left blank, or made payable to bearer, have been sustained as valid, as such a bond must be construed to be in effect an undertaking payable to the person to whom it is issued, or to the holder. *White v. company to issue bonds bearing a certain rate of interest and negotiate them at a certain percentage of their par value, the effect is to exempt railway companies from the general usury statutes.¹

5. General Rights of Bondholders. — A bondholder of a railway company, as such, is merely a general creditor of the company and cannot interfere with its general business.²

Right to Vote as Stockholder. — Some statutes authorizing the issuance of bonds confer upon the bondholders the right under certain circumstances of voting for the election of officers of the corporation.³

Action on Bonds. — A holder of railway bonds, irrespective of whether they are secured by mortgage or deed of trust, may, as a general rule, maintain an action at law on the bonds, and a judgment recovered thereon may be enforced like any other judgment against the railway company.⁴

6. Payment. — Where railroad bonds are to run for a certain time, the company has no authority, prior to their maturity by lapse of time, to call them in and require the holders to receive payment.⁵ Provisions in the bonds accelerating their maturity at the option of the holders on default in the payment of interest are valid at law and in equity.⁶ Where bonds or scrip are payable when the railroad is constructed to a certain point, and before it reaches that point the work is abandoned, the company cannot defend an action for recovery on the bonds on the ground that the indebtedness has not matured, as this would permit it to take advantage of its own wrong.⁷ Railroad bonds, though negotiable, are not promissory notes within

Bond Receivable in Payment of Freight. — A bond conditioned that it shall not be receivable in payment of freight "to a greater amount than one-half of the amount then to be paid by the holder" to the company for freights requires the company to accept it when tendered, although the freight due is more than double the amount of the bond tendered; and such company cannot insist that one bond shall be tendered for each shipment. the meaning of the Massachusetts statutes so as to be entitled to days of grace.¹ When the company has the option of paying interest on its bonds in scrip, it becomes liable to pay in money where it fails to issue the scrip upon the day the interest falls due.²

III. NEGOTIABLE BILLS AND NOTES. — In England and Canada the rule seems to be that railway companies have no implied authority to become the makers of negotiable promissory notes, nor the drawers of negotiable bills, nor the indorsers or acceptors thereof.³

In the United States the doctrine is recognized that railway companies having the power to borrow money or otherwise incur indebtedness have the power to make negotiable promissory notes⁴ and to draw bills⁵ in payment of or as security for such indebtedness, and that they may transfer by indorsement bills and notes which they have taken in the course of their business.⁶ A railroad company has, however, no power to make a note for an indebtedness which it had no power to incur.⁷

IV. GUARANTY AND SURETYSHIP. — The General Rule that a corporation has no power to enter into a contract of suretyship or guaranty, or otherwise to lend its credit to another, unless such power is expressly conferred by its charter or unless such a contract is reasonably necessary or is usual in the conduct of its business,⁸ applies to railway companies;⁹ and the fact that the contract of guaranty or surety will result in gain to the railway company through an increase of its traffic will not bring such a contract within its power.¹⁰

Express Power. — The power to enter into contracts of guaranty or suretyship is sometimes expressly conferred upon railway companies.¹¹

Power Implied. — It is not essential, however, to the existence of the power to contract as surety or guarantor that it be expressly conferred by the charter of the railway company; it may be implied where it is reasonably necessary or proper in order to carry out some other power.¹ Thus, a railway company empowered to aid another company to construct the latter's railway may for such purposes guarantee the latter's bonds.² So a railway company empowered to lease or purchase the road of another company may, as a part of the consideration for such lease or purchase, guarantee the bonds of the latter company.³ Again, where one railway company owns the bonds, notes, and other evidences of the indebtedness of a third person, with power to sell or negotiate them, it may guarantee their payment to enable it to negotiate or sell them to advantage.⁴ Similarly, a railway company may guarantee the payment of the salary of an engineer employed by a contractor for the construction of the road.⁵

Ultra Vires — Right of Bona Fide Holder of Bonds. — Where the contract by one railway company guaranteeing the bonds of another railway company is upon its face such a contract as the former can make, the fact that the guaranty is one which the company has no power to make cannot affect the right of a bona fide holder of the bonds to recover upon the guaranty.⁶

It may be used and understood in many senses. In common parlance, it varies in signification from the day with light, passing April showers to the steady and strong pour-down of an Oregon December. Worcester defines 'rainy' as follows: 'Abounding in rain; showery; wet;' and Webster's definition is the same. But the definition, while it fixes some limit to the signification of the term, as that a rainy day is a wet one, and therefore not a dry one, does not free the matter from the uncertainty which is inherent in the expression." And

RAISE. — To Raise Money, as the term is ordinarily understood, is to collect or procure a supply of money for use, as, in the case of a municipal corporation, by taxation or perhaps by loan.¹

To Raise Children. — It has been held that children have been "raised" when they have attained the age of twenty-one years.²

RAISED CHECKS. — See the title CHECKS, vol. 5, p. 1075.

RANCHMAN. — See note 3.

RANDOM. — Random means done at hazard, or without any settled aim, purpose, or direction; left to chance; casual; haphazard. When the phrase "at random" is used, it is applied to anything done at haphazard or chance.⁴

RANGE. — See note 5.

RANGE BRAND. — See the title BRANDS AND MARKS, vol. 4, p. 874, and see ROAD BRAND.

RANGING. — See note 6.

RANK. (See also the title MILITARY LAW, vol. 20, p. 635.) — The word "rank" is often used to express something different from office. It then becomes a designation or title of honor, dignity, or distinction conferred upon an officer in order to fix his relative position with reference to other officers in matters of privilege, precedence, and sometimes of command, or by which to determine his pay and emoluments.⁷

the court in that case held that evidence was admissible to show the sense in which the term was used.

1. Raise. — Childs v. Hillsborough Electric Light, etc., Co., 70 N. H. 324.

Borrowing. — In Dickinson County v. Warren, 98 Mich. 146, it was held that a board of supervisors, under an authority to raise money, had no power to borrow money. The court said: "The word raise, without qualifying words, is frequently employed in grants of authority to provide the necessary funds for public use in cases where the intent to prescribe the method in which the power is to be exercised, viz., by taxation, is so clearly obvious that the words may be said to have acquired a clearly defined meaning when used in that connection." See also Schneewind v. Niles, 103 Mich. 306; Wells v. Salina, 119 N. Y. 280, 29 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 101.

Pledge. — The directors of a corporation were empowered to issue and sell or pledge all or any of certain bonds for the purpose of raising money. It was held that a liberal construction should be given to the expression "raising money," and that bonds might be issued by the company and pledged as security for work to be done. Winnipeg, etc., R. Co. v. Mann, 7 Manitoba 81.

Raising Revenue. — The Constitution of Alabama provided that bills to raise revenue should originate in the lower house of the legislature. In Perry County v. Selma, etc., R. Co., 58 Ala. 546, it was held that a bill to raise revenue, within this provision, meant a bill to provide for the levy of taxes as a means of collecting revenue, and that a bill for reducing taxation, if it provided for collecting revenue, was still a bill for raising revenue.

An Act Granting a Lottery was as follows: "A lottery is hereby granted," etc., "to raise the sum of," etc. It was held that the word as here used meant "to create or produce a fund," and the word raised as used in the same act was held to mean "actually produced and realized in cash," ready to be paid into the treasury of the state, and not ineffectually attempted to be raised. Opinions of Justices, 7 Me. 504.

2. Raise Children. — Shoemaker v. Stobaugh, 59 Ind. 598, which was an action for an accounting against the widow of a testator who had devised the control, benefit, and proceeds of his real estate to his widow "to help her raise and school all" his children.

3. Ranchman. — Where a statute gave to a ranchman a lien on sheep intrusted to his charge, it was held that the term ranchman did not apply to one merely hired to take care of the sheep, where the owner retained possession and control of them. Hooker v. McAllister, 12 Wash. 46.

4. Random. — Com. v. Bynum, (Ky. 1899) 50 S. W. Rep. 843, quoting Webst. Dict.; Encyc. Dict. In that case it was held that when the defendant, with a fixed purpose, intentionally shot at a dog, he was not in any sense of the word guilty of shooting at random.

5. Range. — In Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Patton, 31 Miss. 185, it was said: "This state is comparatively new, and for the most part sparsely populated, with large bodies of woodlands and prairies which have never been inclosed lying in the neighborhoods of the plantations of our citizens, and which by common consent have been understood, from the early settlement of the state, to be a common of pasture, or, in the phrase of the people, the range, to which large numbers of cattle, hogs, and other animals in the neighborhood, not of a dangerous or unlawful character, have been permitted to resort."

6. Ranging. — See Reid v. Klein, 138 Ind. 484, stated under the title DEEDS, vol. 9, p. 816, note.

7. Rank. — Wood's Case, 15 Ct. Cl. 159.

In Verdier v. Roach, 96 Cal. 476, it was said: "It is assumed by counsel for appellants that before the contingency happens the obligation is not a debt, and hence they conclude that it could not have been 'ranked among the acknowledged debts of the estate.' Conceding, for the sake of the argument, that a contingent claim is not a technical legal debt, it does not follow that it may not be ranked among debts. The first two examples given by Mr. Webster of authorized uses of the verb 'to rank' are as follows: 'Poets were ranked in the class of philosophers;' 'Heresy is ranked with idolatry and witchcraft.' The first does not necessarily mean nor imply that poets are philosophers, nor the second that heresy is idolatry or witchcraft. Nor does the requirement that an allowed claim shall be ranked among debts exclude from the ranks all claims which may not properly be termed legal debts." Quoted in Barto v. Stewart, 21 Wash. 617.

RANSOM. — A ransom is only a redemption for money or other consideration of that which is taken in war.¹

1. Ransom. — Havelock v. Rockwood, 8 T. R. 277, per Grose, J.

Repurchase. — "Nor is a ransom, strictly speaking, a repurchase of the captured property. It is rather a repurchase of the actual right of the captors at the time, be it what it may; or, more properly, it is a relinquishment of all the interest and benefit which the captors might acquire or consummate in the property by the regular adjudications of a prize tribunal, whether it be an interest in rem, a lien, or a mere title to expenses." Maisonnable v. Keating, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 338.

A Ransom Bill is "a contract for payment of ransom of a captured vessel, with stipulations of safe conduct, if she pursue a certain course and arrive at a certain time. If found out of time and course the safe conduct is void." Bouv. L. Dict., citing Wheaton on Int. Law 107.

The cognizance of ransom bills belongs exclusively to admiralty, but an action on a bill of exchange given as collateral security for the payment of a ransom bill may be maintained in a court of common law. Maisonnable v. Keating, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 325.

The payment of a ransom bill cannot be enforced in England during the war by an action on the contract, but can be so enforced in the United States. Bouv. L. Dict., citing 1 Kent's Com. 104, 105; Maisonnable v. Keating, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 325.

An ally is bound by the ransom bill of a co-belligerent. Miller v. Ship Resolution, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 15.

In Sense of Fine. — Where a statute forbade the act of forcible entry under pain of imprisonment and ransom, it was held that the word ransom meant not only a fine, but a severe fine. U. S. v. Griffin, 6 D. C. 57.

I. DEFINITION. — Rape at common law may be defined as the carnal knowledge of a female, forcibly and against her will,¹ or without her consent,² or against her will or consent,³ or when she did not consent.⁴ The expressions "without her consent" and "against her will" mean the same thing, and the attempt to draw a distinction between these phrases as applied to this crime, which has been suggested in some modern books, is unfounded.⁵

II. ORIGIN AND NATURE OF CRIME. — Rape is a common-law crime,⁶ though at the present time there are statutes in all jurisdictions punishing the offense.⁷ Carnal abuse of children with their consent is a statutory crime.⁸ These two crimes, though their punishment is made the same, have been held to be distinct,⁹ so that under an indictment for rape the defendant could not be convicted of the other crime.¹⁰ If the indictment is for a forcible rape, an allegation that the female was under the statutory age of consent is immaterial, and on proof that the rape was committed with force, a conviction is proper though the evidence shows that she was over the age of consent.¹ So one indicted for carnal abuse of a child under the statutory age of consent may be convicted though the evidence shows the use of force, and therefore that the accused was also guilty of rape proper.² In England it has been held that under an indictment for the misdemeanor of carnally knowing a girl between the ages of ten and twelve years the defendant cannot be convicted on evidence that the girl was under ten years of age and that he was therefore guilty of rape.³

III. WHO MAY COMMIT RAPE — 1. In General. — From the nature of the crime of rape, it is, of course, apparent that the crime can be directly committed only by a male person;⁴ but a female person who aids and abets in the commission of the crime by a male person may be guilty as a principal in the second degree or as an accessory or accomplice.⁵ All male persons of sufficient physical capacity to perform the act of carnal intercourse may commit the crime of rape.⁶

Age. — All male persons over the age of fourteen years are presumed to be physically capable of committing the crime of rape unless the contrary appears.⁷ Under some of the statutes punishing the carnal knowledge of female children irrespective of consent, the criminality of the defendant and the degree of his punishment are made to depend upon his age, and not upon his physical capacity to commit the act of carnal intercourse.⁸

2. Impotent Persons. — No one can commit the crime of rape unless he has the physical capacity to perform the act of carnal knowledge, and therefore one who is impotent, irrespective of his age, cannot be guilty of the crime.⁹ So it has been held that impotency renders the accused incapable of committing the crime of attempt or assault with intent to commit rape,¹⁰ though in some jurisdictions in the United States it has been held that impotency was no defense to a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape.¹¹

Drunkenness. — Though drunkenness is no defense where the crime of rape is consummated,¹² it may render the accused temporarily impotent and therefore totally incapable of committing the crime, and it is, of course, to be considered for such purpose;¹³ and where the prosecution is for assault with intent to rape, drunkenness to such an extent as to render him unable to form the specific intent to ravish is a defense.¹

Aiding and Abetting. — An impotent person who aids and abets another to commit rape may be guilty of rape as a principal in the second degree or as an accomplice or accessory.²

Proof of Potency. — On an issue as to the impotency of the accused, it has been held that the burden is on the prosecution to prove potency,³ and to warrant a conviction this fact must, of course, be established beyond a reasonable doubt.⁴

3. Infants. — The capacity of infants to commit the crime of rape or of assault with intent to rape has been fully treated elsewhere in this work.⁵

4. Husband. — A husband does not commit rape by having carnal knowledge of his wife forcibly and against her will.⁶

A Husband Who Aids and Abets a Third Person to ravish his wife may be guilty as principal in the second degree, accomplice, or accessory.⁷

5. Accomplices and Accessories. — The crime of rape permits of accomplices and accessories, and all persons who aid and abet the commission of the crime, though they do not themselves have carnal knowledge of the woman ravished, may be punished as principals in the second degree or accessories;⁸

but a person who merely stands by when a rape is committed or attempted, and who does no act to aid, assist, or abet its commission,¹ or who merely has knowledge that a rape is being committed and does not interfere,² is not guilty.

In New Jersey it is held that a person who merely furnishes a room in which a male person may have carnal knowledge of a female child under the statutory age, with her consent, this being a misdemeanor, is not guilty as an accomplice or accessory.³

IV. UPON WHOM RAPE MAY BE COMMITTED — 1. In General. — Rape or assault with intent to commit rape can be committed only upon a female human being;⁴ but it is immaterial that such female is insane or idiotic.⁵

Daughter or Sister. — The crime of rape may be committed upon the sister or daughter of the accused though that crime may also constitute incest.⁶

2. Age of Victim. — Rape, attempt to commit rape, or assault with intent to commit rape may be committed upon any female human being, irrespective of her age,⁷ as upon a female child under the age at which carnal knowledge with her consent is made a statutory offense also designated as rape.⁸ Under the statutes which punish the carnal knowledge of any female "child" under a specified age, though she consents thereto, the term "child" includes a female infant under the specified age though she has reached the state of puberty.⁹

3. Chastity of Victim. — Rape, attempt to commit rape, or assault with intent to commit rape may be committed upon a female irrespective of her previous character and though she was a common prostitute.¹⁰

Statutory Requirement of Chastity. — Some statutes punishing the carnal knowledge of female children beneath a certain age require between certain ages that the female should have been chaste or of previous good repute;² but if the statute does not contain this requirement the unchastity of the child is immaterial.³

V. CARNAL KNOWLEDGE — 1. In General. — Carnal knowledge by the man of the person of the female is an essential element to the crime of rape,⁴ but the fact of carnal knowledge may be proved by circumstantial evidence.⁵

2. Penetration. — Essential to the carnal knowledge of a female is penetration, that is, the virile member of the male must have been within the labia of the pudendum of the female; but the slightest penetration, as thus defined, is sufficient.⁶ Actual contact merely of the sexual organ of the male with the organ of the female,¹ or emission without penetration,² is not sufficient to constitute rape.

Proof of Penetration. — The fact of penetration may be proved by circumstantial evidence.³ No particular form of words on the part of a witness testifying to the fact of penetration is necessary,⁴ nor is expert testimony necessary to such fact.⁵ But to warrant a conviction the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there was a penetration.⁶

3. Emission — English Doctrine. — In the earliest English decisions it was held that emission was not essential to the consummation of the crime of rape.⁷ At a later date, however, it was expressly adjudged that emission as well as penetration was essential.⁸ After this decision the statute 9 Geo. IV., c. 31, § 18, was enacted, which provided that in prosecutions for rape proof of penetration alone should be sufficient and dispensed with proof of emission; and the same proof is sufficient in prosecutions for the crime of carnally knowing children under the prohibited age.⁹

United States Doctrine. — In the United States, with few exceptions, the rule has always been that emission was not essential to the crime of rape or to the statutory crime of having carnal knowledge of a child below the age of consent;¹ and in some jurisdictions this rule is expressly recognized by statute.²

VI. FORCE. — Force, actual or constructive, is an essential element in the crime of rape, but any, even the least, force is sufficient.³

As to What Amounts to Force, different views have been taken by different courts. It is plain that something more is required than the bodily contact necessarily implied in the act of sexual intercourse when consummated with the consent of the woman.⁴ On the other hand, force may exist without actual violence.⁵ Whether force was used very generally depends on the

4. What Amounts to Force. — Per May, C. J., in Reg. v. Dee, 15 Cox C. C. 579 (a case decided in the Court for Crown Cases Reserved in Ireland, the judges refusing to follow English precedents); Reg. v. Sweeney, 8 Cox C. C. 223. In the last case, decided in Scotland in the High Court of Justiciary, Lord Armillan observed: "I am of opinion that force, actual or constructive, is an essential element in the crime of rape; that any mode of overpowering the will without actual personal violence, such as the use of threats or drugs, is force in the estimation of law; and that any degree of force is sufficient in law to constitute the crime of rape if it is sufficient in fact to overcome the opposing will of the woman, but it must be force employed to overcome the will; and I do not concur in the proposition maintained by the prosecutor, that the mere bodily contact necessarily implied in the act of connection is sufficient force to satisfy the legal definition." Lord Cowan said: "What is requisite is the forcibly taking possession of the woman's person and having connection with her, her will resisting; or if not resisting, her will having been overcome by felonious acts of the assailer." See also Walters v. People, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 144; Baldwin v. State, 15 Tex. App. 275.

Where the Woman Is Insensible and therefore incapable of consenting, the force necessary to the performance of the sexual act is sufficient to render such act rape. McQuirk v. State, 84 Ala. 435, 5 Am. St. Rep. 381; Com. v. Burke, 105 Mass. 376, 7 Am. Rep. 531 (quoted under AGAINST, vol. 1, p. 926); Payne v. State, 40 Tex. Crim. 202, 76 Am. St. Rep. 712. 5. Force May Exist Without Violence. — Don Moran v. People, 25 Mich. 356, 12 Am. Rep. 283, the court saying: "We think it is well and properly settled that the terms 'by force' do not necessarily imply the positive exertion

Force Must Relate to Carnal Knowledge. — The element of force must relate to the act of carnal knowledge. Thus, breaking into a dwelling house and having carnal knowledge of a female therein by fraudulently procuring her consent does not involve a sufficient element of force to render the act rape.³

Arts or Devices to Corrupt Moral Nature. — So any employment of arts or devices, without violence, by which the moral nature of the female is corrupted so that she is no longer able to resist the temptation to yield to sexual desire does not involve a sufficient element of force.⁴

Carnally Knowing Children under Statutory Age — Whether Force Essential. — The statutory crime, though designated as rape, of carnally knowing female children under a certain age does not, it seems, involve any element of force, actual or constructive.⁵ In some cases, however, it has been said that the element of force in such cases is implied from the carnal act and the incapacity of the infant to consent.⁶

VII. CONSENT — 1. In General. — An essential element in the crime of rape is that the act of intercourse should have been against the will or without the consent of the woman.⁷

2. Consent Before Rape Completed. — Consent of the woman at any time before penetration will prevent the act from constituting rape though the

of actual physical force in the act of compelling submission of the female to the sexual connection; but that force or violence threatened as the result of noncompliance, and for the purpose of preventing resistance or extorting consent, if it be such as to create a real apprehension of dangerous consequences or great bodily harm, or such as in any manner to overpower the mind of the victim so that she dare not resist, is, and upon all sound principles must be, regarded for this purpose as in all respects equivalent to force actually exerted for the same purpose." To the same effect see Clymer v. Com., (Ky. 1901) 64 S. W. Rep. 409; State v. Hann, 73 Minn. 140; Hays v. People, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 351, stated under the title ATTEMPTS TO COMMIT CRIME, vol. 3, p. 258, note.

As to Submission Secured by Threats, see infra, this title, Consent — Submission Distinguished from Consent.

1. Force as Depending on Consent. — In Reg. v. Dee, 15 Cox C. C. 579, commenting on certain English cases which held that consent obtained by fraudulently personating a woman's husband was sufficient to prevent the crime being rape, but that the defendant might be guilty of an assault, May, C. J., said: "If the consent of the woman prevented the crime being a rape, it would seem that it would also prevent it being an assault, which consent excludes."

"Without Her Consent" and "Against Her Consent." — Where the definition of rape contains the phrase "without her consent," a mere absence of consent, as in the case of a sleeping woman or a woman incapable of consent from drunkenness or imbecility, is said to render the act rape. Where the phrase "against her consent" is used, a positive dissent is said to be necessary. Reg. v. Fletcher, Bell Cr. Cas.

assault, when first made, was against her will, and though she expressly refused at first to consent to intercourse;¹ but if the assault in the first instance was with the intent to have carnal knowledge of the woman with or without her consent, and to use any force necessary to overcome her resistance, the woman's subsequent consent to the act of intercourse will not prevent the act from constituting assault with intent to commit rape.²

3. Subsequent Consent. — The consent of the female after an act of sexual intercourse effected against her will has been completed cannot prevent the defendant from being guilty of rape.³ Whether consent given after penetration has been effected (which constitutes the crime of rape), but before the act of intercourse has been finished, is sufficient to negative rape is, perhaps, not clear. It has been said that consent during any part of the act of intercourse relieves the defendant from the guilt of rape.⁴

4. Withdrawal of Consent. — Consent to an act of sexual intercourse may be withdrawn at any time before the act is completed, and if it is so withdrawn and the defendant afterwards effects penetration he is guilty of rape.⁵

5. Sleeping Woman. — Carnal knowledge of a woman while she is asleep, her body being penetrated before she awakes, is against her will and without her consent so as to constitute rape.⁶

6. Unconscious, Drunken, or Drugged Woman. — Sexual intercourse with a woman while she is unconscious has been held to be against the will of the woman and without her consent so as to constitute rape.⁷

63, 8 Cox C. C. 131; Mooney v. State, 29 Tex. App. 257. 7. Weak-minded, Insane, or Idiotic Woman. — Sexual intercourse with an insane or idiotic woman whose mind, to the knowledge of the man, is totally incapable of consenting to the act is rape though she submits to the act without resistance, as in such a case the intercourse is without her consent and against her will.¹ If, however, the female, though weak-minded or idiotic, consents to the intercourse from animal instincts, passion, or morbid desires, the act is not rape.²

8. Fraud. — Where the female consents to the sexual intercourse, the act cannot be said to be against her will or without her consent though the consent is procured by fraud, and it is the generally recognized rule that her consent thus procured will prevent the act from constituting rape.³

Statutes Rendering Intercourse Procured by Fraud Rape have been enacted in some of the United States.⁴

Fraud of Physician. — Where a physician has sexual intercourse with a female patient with her consent, though her consent is procured by a fraudulent representation that such act is necessary to her medical treatment, the act does not constitute rape.⁵ It is otherwise, however, where the patient is a

It would seem that the man must know of the woman's absolute incapacity to assent or dissent and must intend to take advantage of such incapacity. People v. Crosswell, 13 Mich. 427, 87 Am. When the woman is insane or idiotic, mere proof of connection will not warrant the case being left to the jury; there must be some evidence that the act was without her consent — e. g., that she was incapable of expressing consent or dissent, or of exercising any judgment upon the matter, from imbecility of mind or defect of understanding; if she consented from animal instinct or passion, it would not be rape. *Reg. v. child and does not understand the nature of the act.¹

Personating Husband. — Again, where a man secures the consent of a married woman to sexual intercourse by personating her husband, he is not guilty of rape;² but if the woman, before penetration, discovers the fraud on the part of the man, and he, instead of desisting, completes his purpose notwithstanding her resistance and dissent, he is guilty of rape.³

Mock Marriage. — So where the consent of a woman to sexual intercourse is secured by a mock marriage, the act is not rape.⁴

9. Consent of Infants — a. EARLY DOCTRINE. — Under the early common law, it does not seem that there was any fixed age at which a child was deemed incompetent to consent to sexual intercourse so as to render the act of intercourse rape irrespective of consent upon her part.⁵ In 1275, however, the forcible ravishment against her will of a female of age or the carnal knowledge, even with her consent, of a child "within age" (which was considered to be twelve years) was made a misdemeanor by the first statute of Westminster,⁶ and ten years afterward, by the second statute of Westminster, rape was made a felony, but nothing was said in this statute as to the age of the victim.⁷ Then, after some three hundred years, a statute was passed making the carnal knowledge of a child under ten years of age, with her consent, a felony.⁸

In the United States, the courts in a number of cases, adopting the effect of these early English statutes as a part of their common law, have considered as rape the carnal knowledge of a child under the age of ten⁹ or even twelve years.¹⁰

Rep. 283, it was held that if, however, a girl was induced by a physician to submit to sexual intercourse with him from the fear, falsely and fraudulently inspired by him for the purpose of overcoming her opposition, that if she did not yield, he would use instruments for the purpose of enlarging her parts, and that such operation would probably kill her, he is guilty of rape.

In Ireland the contrary has been held, upon the ground that the consent of the woman was to a lawful act by the husband; that, she being deceived, not even adultery is committed; that the consent must be not only to the act, but to the person, and the English cases to the contrary were disapproved. Reg. v. Dee, 15 Cox C. C. 579, 14 L. R. Ir. 468.

Statutes. — In North Carolina procuring intercourse with a married woman by fraudulently personating her husband is made a separate statutory felony. State v. Williams, 128 N. Car. 573. As to the previous rule in this state, see the title ASSAULT AND BATTERY, vol. 2, p. 987, note.

This statute was held to leave the case of girls over ten and under twelve years of age to be governed by the first statute of Westminster, and it was held that intercourse with a girl between those ages was not felonious rape unless against her consent. 1 East P. and in some instances over these ages, where from the physical development of the victim she could be considered incapable of being prompted to consent by the instincts of animal passion,¹ though in fact she consented to the act of intercourse, these decisions being based on the ground that in law she was incapable of consenting. On the other hand, if the child was over ten years of age and capable of consenting, her consent was held to prevent the act from being rape.² In all cases, the age of the female ravished, as stated elsewhere, is an element for consideration in determining whether in fact there was consent in fact on her part to the sexual intercourse.³

b. STATUTORY AGE OF CONSENT—(1) In General.—At the present time in all jurisdictions the statutes either designate as rape the carnal knowledge of a female child under a designated age though she consents, or punish it as a distinct crime, the extent of the punishment sometimes varying according to the age of the child,⁴ and the age varying greatly in the several states.⁵

The Constitutionality of Statutes raising the age of consent to sixteen or eighteen years has been upheld as against the objection that they inflict cruel and unusual punishments. See the title CRUEL AND UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT, vol. 8, p. 440, note.

Such statutes are not unconstitutional because marriage under the age of consent for

Under these statutes, the fact that the child has reached the age of puberty is immaterial.¹ On the other hand, where the child is over such statutory age, she is deemed capable of consenting so as to prevent the act from constituting rape proper.²

(2) Ignorance of Age. — The fact that the defendant was ignorant of the age of the child with whom he had sexual intercourse and who was below the statutory age of consent, and bona fide believed that she was above the age and could therefore legally consent to such intercourse, is no defense.³

(3) Proof of Age — Admissibility of Evidence. — The age of the girl may be proved by records or documents⁴ or by other evidence, such as belief and reputation as to her age among her family.⁵

Testimony of Child or Members of Family. — A child may testify as to her own age,⁶ as may her parents⁷ and her brothers and sisters.⁸ But the child's declarations to another as to her age are not admissible.⁹

The Appearance of the Child may be taken into consideration.¹⁰

The Opinion of Medical Experts has been held to be admissible on the question of age.¹¹

The Burden of Proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the child was under the statutory age of consent is upon the prosecution.¹²

Sufficiency. — The question whether the child was within the age of consent is, as the existence of any other fact, for the determination of the jury,¹³ and though the evidence as to her age was uncontradicted, it has been held to be error on the part of the court to assume such fact as established.¹⁴ Where the evidence as to the child's age is conflicting, the finding of the jury rape is recognized. State v. Rollins, 80 Minn. 216.

thereon is as a rule conclusive;¹ but there must be a fair amount of evidence to establish her age, and in a number of cases the courts have held that the evidence in regard thereto was insufficient to allow the submission of the question to the jury.²

10. Submission Distinguished from Consent. — Submission on the part of the woman to the act of carnal knowledge is not necessarily the same as consent, so as to prevent the act from being rape.³

Fear Induced by Threats Equivalent to Force. — Where the woman's submission to the act of intercourse is due to threats and an exhibition of physical force on the part of the defendant, putting her in reasonable fear of death or of great bodily harm in case of resistance, the fact that no actual violence was used by the defendant is immaterial.⁴ It is not necessary, however, that the woman expressly consent by words to prevent the act from being rape, but her consent may be implied from her acts, manner, and conduct,⁵ and even against her express declaration.⁶

11. Resistance — a. IN GENERAL. — To establish that absence of consent on the part of the woman which is an essential element in rape, it is necessary, where the woman was in possession of her faculties and not laboring under some disability, to show resistance on her part.⁷

Extent of Resistance. — As bearing on the extent of the necessary resistance by the woman, the courts have used various expressions, illustrations of which are collected in the note.⁸ Some phrases, however, are purely relative.

The nature and extent of the resistance required in each particular case depend upon the peculiar circumstances attending it, including the strength of the man and the age and mental and physical strength of the woman assaulted.¹ The sufficiency of the resistance is to be tested by the determination of the question whether her failure to make further resistance was or was not intentional, in order that the man might accomplish his purpose.² Thus, a woman cannot be regarded as consenting where her nonresistance proceeds from fear of great bodily harm in case she should continue to resist,³ or from the honest and bona fide belief that further resistance would be absolutely useless.⁴

b. CONSIDERATIONS AFFECTING DEGREE OF RESISTANCE — (1) In General. — In determining whether the resistance of the prosecutrix was of such a character as to show a want of consent, it is proper to take into consideration her mental and physical condition,⁵ her age, as less resistance is required from a child of tender years than would be required of an adult woman,¹ the physical strength of the man,² the relationship of the parties to each other,³ and all the circumstances attending the transaction.⁴

(2) Outcry. — The failure of a woman, when assaulted for the purpose of sexual intercourse, to make outcry, especially when help is known to be at hand, is always a material fact to be considered as showing want of resistance and an implied or express assent to the sexual intercourse,⁵ though, of course, the failure of the prosecutrix to make outcry is not conclusive of the innocence of the accused,⁶ and on the other hand, evidence that the woman did make outcry is evidence to show force on the part of the accused and resistance on her part.⁷

(3) Condition of Person and Clothing. — Similarly, the fact that there were no marks of violence upon the person of the woman⁸ or that her clothing was not torn⁹ is to be taken into consideration, while on the other hand the existence of these facts tends to show resistance on her part.¹⁰

12. Particular Considerations Showing Consent — a. FAILURE TO MAKE COMPLAINT. — Failure by the victim of the alleged rape to make immediate disclosure or complaint of the outrage is to be considered as tending to show consent on her part.¹¹ It is always permissible for the prosecution to explain such failure, for the purpose of rebutting any inference to be drawn therefrom,¹ and when the delay or failure is satisfactorily explained a conviction may be had.²

To Corroborate the Testimony of the Victim of the alleged rape it is always permissible to show that complaint and disclosure of the alleged outrage were immediately made by her.³

The Admissibility of Complaints of the Woman generally will be discussed later.⁴

b. CONTINUED FRIENDLY RELATIONS.—The fact that the relations between the accused and the victim of the alleged rape remain friendly and cordial after the alleged outrage is a very material consideration, tending to show that the sexual intercourse was with the consent of the woman.⁵

c. CHASTITY OF WOMAN.—On the theory that an unchaste woman will more readily consent to sexual intercourse than a woman who is chaste, it is a well-recognized rule that the character of the woman for chastity is to be taken into consideration in determining whether the sexual intercourse was with or without her consent.⁶

d. IMPREGNATION.—Though there is no doubt that impregnation may follow from an act of rape,⁷ yet the fact that the female made no complaint until the signs of pregnancy could be no longer concealed may be considered as discrediting her testimony.⁸

13. Burden of Proof.—The accused has not the burden of proving consent; the prosecution must prove beyond a reasonable doubt the want of consent.⁹

VIII. ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO RAPE.—At common law, where there was no penetration, and the crime of rape was not therefore committed, the accused might still be guilty of assault with intent to rape;¹⁰ and this at common law constituted a misdemeanor.¹¹ By statute in many jurisdictions, an assault with intent to rape is expressly made a crime and generally a felony.¹²

The crime of assault with intent to rape includes every ingredient of the crime of rape except the element of penetration;¹ and therefore if the assault was made under such circumstances that the act of sexual intercourse, if it had been actually accomplished, would not have been rape, the accused cannot be guilty of assault with intent to commit rape.² The elements of the offense of assault with intent to commit rape, then, are (1) an assault, (2) an intent to have carnal knowledge of the female assaulted, and (3) a purpose to carry into effect this intention against the consent of the female and to use whatever force may become necessary to accomplish the object.³

The Assault must contain all the elements of a common assault.⁴ The consent of the female, if of legal age to consent, prevents the offense being assault with intent to rape.⁵

The Connecticut Statute merely prescribes a new penalty for an existing common-law offense. Rookey v. State, 70 Conn. 104.

Abandonment of Purpose. — Where the assault is made in the first instance with an intent to commit rape, the subsequent abandonment by the accused of his unlawful purpose, irrespective of the cause of such abandonment, is no defense.¹

Merger. — The general doctrine of merger in its application to criminal law has been fully examined under its appropriate title.² Additional authorities and specific references may be found in the note.³ When on an indictment for rape the evidence establishes some sexual crime not an essential of rape, no conviction can be had.⁴

IX. ATTEMPT TO RAPE. — An attempt to commit a rape is an indictable offense without statute,⁵ but in some jurisdictions an attempt to rape is expressly made a crime, or comes within a general provision punishing generally attempts to commit felonies.⁶ On an indictment for rape, the accused may be convicted of an attempt to rape.¹

Attempt Distinguished from Assault with Intent to Commit. — An attempt to commit rape is distinct from an assault with intent to rape, as the element of assault which is essential to the consummation of the latter offense² is not necessary to the crime of attempt to rape.³ Thus, in England and in a few jurisdictions in the United States, when the attempt is made to have sexual intercourse with an infant under the statutory age of consent, the accused is not guilty of assault with intent to rape if the infant in fact consented, as the consent destroys the element of assault;⁴ but he may be convicted of an attempt to rape.⁵ So it has been held that a verdict of guilty of an "attempt to commit rape" will not authorize a sentence for an assault with intent to commit rape.⁶ And in Texas it is held that on an indictment for an assault with intent to rape, the accused cannot be convicted of an attempt to rape.⁷

Overt Act. — A mere intention existing in the mind of the accused to commit rape is not an attempt to commit rape; there must be some overt act in pursuance of such intent.⁸ But the overt act need not be such as amounts to a technical assault.⁹

An Intent on the part of the accused to have sexual intercourse with the female with force and against her will, or, in other words, the intent to commit rape, must, of course, exist in the mind of the accused to render him guilty of an attempt to rape.¹⁰

Proof of Intent. — The principles regarding the proof of intent in prosecutions

Statutes in some states make the attempt a felony punishable with one-half the term of imprisonment for the completed offense. See infra, this title, Punishment.

Attempt by Negro upon White Woman. — Under early statutes in some of the Southern states, an attempt by a negro to commit rape upon a white woman was a capital offense. Anthony v. State, 29 Ala. 27; Lewis v. State, 30 Ala. 54, 68 Am. Dec. 113; Lewis v. State, 35 Ala. 380; Pleasant v. State, 13 Ark. 360, 15 Ark. 624; Grandison v. State, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 451; *Henry v. Dec. 113; Wash v. State, 14 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 120. These cases arose under old statutes punishing an attempt by a negro on a white woman with death.

for attempts to rape are the same as in prosecutions for assault with intent to commit rape.¹

X. COMPULSORY DEFILEMENT. — By statute in some states it is made a crime by force, menace, or duress to compel a woman to be defiled against her will. While to constitute such a crime it is necessary that the defilement be against the will of the woman, and her dissent must be shown by the prosecution,² it is not necessary to show the same degree of force and resistance on the part of the woman as is required in the crime of rape.³

XI. TAKING OR DETENTION FOR SEXUAL INTERCOURSE. — In Kentucky the statutes make it an offense to take or detain a woman against her will for the purpose of sexual intercourse. The purpose of this statute is to punish those who "take or detain" females against their will and consent in instances where they would not be guilty of rape or attempt to rape.⁴

XII. EVIDENCE — 1. Admissibility — a. IN GENERAL. — The general rules of evidence as regards relevancy and materiality apply of course to prosecutions for rape.⁵

Where the Woman Detained Is So Weak-minded as to be unable to consent to the act of sexual intercourse, but the defendant is ignorant of such fact and she so conducts herself that a reasonable person would deem her to consent, he is not guilty of detaining her against her will. Beaven v. Com., (Ky. 1895) 30 S. W. Rep. 968.

To Detain, within the meaning of this statute, is to stop, delay, or restrain from proceeding, and any actual detention is sufficient. Paynter v. Com., (Ky. 1900) 55 S. W. Rep. 687, holding that to take the crutch of a crippled girl and to hold her hand while soliciting sexual intercourse was sufficient.

But there must be an actual detention by force or threats; and so where a drunken man solicited a woman to have sexual intercourse with him, following her as she ran, it was held that he could not be convicted under the statute. Riley v. Com., (Ky. 1900) 55 S. W. Rep. 547.

As to what amounts to detention under a somewhat similar Missouri statute, see State v. Maloney, 105 Mo. 10, stated under DETAIN, vol. 9, p. 409.

b. ADMISSIONS BY DEFENDANT. — Admissions by the accused may, of course, be given in evidence against him, and such admissions may be either express or implied from equivocal statements or from his conduct.¹

c. ADMISSIONS BY PROSECUTRIX. — As the female upon whom the rape is charged to have been committed is not a party to the prosecution, her statements out of court, except when they constitute a part of the res gestæ, or are introduced for the purpose of impeaching her testimony after a proper foundation has been laid therefor,² are wholly inadmissible against the state.³

d. CHARACTER OF DEFENDANT. — Instances arising in prosecutions for rape and illustrating the application of general rules of evidence to evidence of the defendant's character are given in the note.⁴

e. CHASTITY OF PROSECUTRIX — (1) Evidence for Defense — (a) In General — Reputation. — As a general rule, a witness's general credibility for truth and veracity cannot be impeached by showing his or her reputation for chastity;⁵ but in prosecutions for rape, the character of the prosecuting witness for chastity is always in issue as bearing on the probability of her consent to the act.⁶ And the fact that the prosecutrix is not a witness does not exclude evidence on the part of the defense attacking her reputation for chastity.¹

Attempts — Assault with Intent to Rape. — The rule admitting evidence of the reputation of the prosecutrix for chastity applies in prosecutions for attempt to rape or assault with intent to commit rape.²

(b) Particular Acts of Unchastity — With Third Persons. — By the great weight of authority it is held that in prosecutions for rape specific acts of unchastity on the part of the prosecutrix with third persons cannot be shown in evidence,³ though in a few jurisdictions the contrary is held.⁴

In McDermott v. State, 13 Ohio St. 332, 82 Am. Dec. 444, evidence that the prosecutrix had made an arrangement with a third person to have sexual intercourse with him upon the day of the alleged rape was held to be inadmissible.

See also contra cases under the title CHARACTER (IN EVIDENCE), vol. 5, p. 878.

Without deciding whether specific acts may be shown to impeach the prosecutrix's chastity, it has been held that evidence that she had been in the habit of receiving men at her house

With Defendant. — In all jurisdictions, even those which refuse to allow the introduction of evidence of specific acts of unchastity by the prosecutrix with third persons, it is now recognized as a settled rule that the defense may show specific acts of unchastity between the prosecutrix and the defendant, as tending to show that the sexual intercourse complained of was with her express or implied consent.¹ The question whether the prosecution may show prior acts of intercourse between the prosecutrix and the defendant is discussed hereinafter.²

(c) Carnal Knowledge of Children under Age of Consent. — In prosecutions for carnally knowing a child under the statutory age of consent, as consent on her part is no defense, the defense can show neither the reputation of the prosecutrix for chastity,³ specific acts of unchastity on her part with third persons,⁴ nor previous intercourse by her with the defendant.⁵

(d) Admissibility to Rebut Other Evidence. — Where the condition of the private parts of the female is relied upon to show the fact of sexual intercourse, evidence to show other acts of intercourse between the prosecutrix and other persons is admissible to show the cause of such condition and to rebut the contention that it was caused by the defendant.⁶ For example, such evi-for promiscuous intercourse is admissible, as such evidence goes further than specific acts and shows her to be a prostitute. Woods v. People, 55 N. Y. 515, 14 Am. Rep. 309.

Thus, where a woman testifies that she was unconscious when the act was committed, and, to prove its commission, the prosecution proves the subsequent want of physical evidences of virginity, evidence of specific acts of unchastity on her part is admissible to account for such want of evidences of virginity. Shirwin v. People, 69 Ill. 55.

On Cross-examination of Witness as to Reputation for Chastity. — Where a witness on behalf of the prosecution testifies in support of the prosecutrix's general reputation for chastity, he may, on cross-examination, have his attention called to particular acts of unchastity on her part for the purpose of ascertaining the dence is admissible where it is shown that the prosecutrix has a venereal disease similar to a disease with which the defendant was afflicted,¹ or where injury to the private parts of a child under the statutory age of consent is shown for the purpose of showing intercourse between her and the defendant,² or where the prosecution has shown the pregnancy of the prosecutrix, which it claims resulted from intercourse between her and the accused.³

(e) Admissibility as Relating to Time. — Evidence of unchastity of the prosecutrix should be restricted to her character and acts prior to the time of the alleged rape. Thus, the defense cannot show her reputation for unchastity acquired after the alleged rape,⁴ nor specific acts of unchastity on her part committed thereafter.⁵ But there is not, it seems, any fixed rule which will exclude evidence of acts committed or reputation acquired long prior to the alleged rape on the ground that such evidence relates to a time too remote.⁶

(f) Purpose and Effect of Evidence of Unchastity. — The inference to be drawn from evidence of the unchastity of the prosecutrix is for the jury.⁷

(2) Evidence for Prosecution. — Where the defense first introduces evidence to show unchastity of the prosecutrix, the prosecution may, of course, introduce evidence to support her general character for chastity;⁸ but unless her character for chastity is first attacked by the defense, the prosecution, according to the better doctrine, is not entitled to introduce evidence in support thereof.⁹

f. COMPLAINT BY PROSECUTRIX — (1) In General. — It is a well-settled rule that evidence that the prosecutrix made complaint that the alleged crime had been committed upon her is admissible for the purpose of corroborating her testimony by showing that her conduct was consistent therewith.¹⁰ For

In Brown v. State, 72 Miss. 997, however, evidence that seven years before the alleged crime the prosecutrix contracted a venereal disease by promiscuous sexual intercourse was held to be inadmissible.

7. Effect of Evidence of Unchastity. — Barnett v. State, 83 Ala. 40; Dryman v. State, 102 Ala. 130.

The proper instruction in this regard is merely that the proof of the unchastity of the prosecutrix is to be taken into consideration in determining whether the intercourse was had with the consent of the prosecutrix.

this purpose the prosecutrix may be examined as to such fact on her examination in chief, without waiting for her testimony to be first attacked; ¹ and of course the persons to whom complaint was made may be called to testify to that fact. ² In England, where the prosecutrix testified to the making of complaint, the court has required the prosecution to also call as a witness the person to whom the complaint was alleged to have been made; ³ but it is not necessary that every one to whom the prosecutrix made complaint should be called to testify thereto. ⁴

Explaining Failure to Complain. — As hereinbefore stated, the fact that the prosecutrix failed to make an early complaint of the offense is an element for consideration in impeachment of her testimony, and evidence is therefore admissible to explain her failure or delay in this regard. ⁵

(2) Particulars of Complaint — (a) Doctrine in United States — General Rule. — Though there is a direct conflict of authority, the rule established by the great weight of decisions in the United States is that the particulars of the complaint or statement of the prosecutrix relating to the offense are not admissible in evidence in the first instance and cannot be testified to by either the prosecutrix or the persons to whom complaint was made. The prosecution can merely show the fact that the complaint was made by her. ⁶ After the credibility or the particular testimony of the prosecutrix has been attacked, the prosecution is entitled to show her complaint in detail, either by her testimony or by that of other persons to whom the complaint was made;¹ and where on cross-examination the defense elicits only in part the particulars of the complaint, the prosecutrix may then prove the whole of such particulars.²

Minority Rule in United States. — In a few jurisdictions in the United States the courts permit the prosecution in the first instance to go into the particulars of the complaint by the prosecutrix to show that her conduct at the time of the offense was consistent with her testimony and thereby corroborate her, though her credibility or testimony has not been attacked by the defense.³ And in Michigan it has been held that the rule excluding the particulars of the complaint is not inflexible and ought to yield where the circumstances of the case render it inapplicable, as where the female ravished is of tender years.⁴

undoubtedly in effect that the particulars of the complaint of the prosecutrix should not be admitted in evidence in the first instance;¹ but in later decisions the courts have refused to follow this doctrine, and have held that the particulars of the complaint may be given in evidence for the purpose of enabling the jury to judge whether the conduct of the prosecutrix was consistent with her testimony, negating her consent and affirming that the acts complained of were against her will and in accordance with the conduct they would expect in a truthful woman under the circumstances detailed by her.² It is held, however, that the particulars of the complaint are not evidence of the facts complained of, and that the judge should direct the jury not to make use of the complaint as any evidence whatever of those facts or for any other purpose than that stated above;³ and lapse of time between the commission of the offense and the making of the complaint may be sufficient ground to render the particulars of her complaint inadmissible even for the limited purpose above stated.⁴ Under this doctrine particulars as to the name of the assailant have been held to be admissible.⁵

(c) What Are Particulars.—Under the doctrine which excludes in the first instance the particulars of the complaint, the statement of the prosecutrix as to the name of or her description of her assailant is not admissible,⁶ though it is permissible to show the fact that the prosecutrix in her complaint named a person as her assailant, provided the name of such person is not brought out;⁷ and in some cases the courts have not considered the statement of the prosecutrix as to the name of her assailant a particular of her complaint which should be excluded, and have admitted such statement though the other particulars of the complaint were excluded.⁸ Similarly, statements of the prosecutrix in her complaint as to the place of the commission of the offense,⁹ as to what clothes she had on at the time,¹⁰ as to the violence used,¹¹ and that scratches or injuries to her person were made by the accused in the commission of the offense,¹² have been held to be inadmissible.

Matters Held Not to Be Particulars. — The circumstances under which the complaint was made,¹ when and where² and to whom it was made,³ the fact that the prosecutrix complained of being ravished,⁴ and her condition at the time⁵ are considered not to be particulars of the complaint and to be admissible in evidence. So her statements as to pain she is suffering do not relate to the details of the assault so as to render them inadmissible.⁶

(3) Lapse of Time or Delay in Making Complaint. — Lapse of time between the commission of the alleged offense and the making of the complaint by the prosecutrix does not of itself render evidence of the fact that complaint was made inadmissible, but is only a matter for consideration as to whether such delay is consistent with the testimony of the prosecutrix,⁷ and the question whether there was or was not too great delay in the making of the complaint is generally for the determination of the court.⁸ But when there was considerable lapse of time between the commission of the offense and the making of complaint, and the delay in making the complaint was not explained, it has been held to be error to admit evidence that the complaint was made.⁹

(4) Prosecutrix Not Witness. — As the purpose for which evidence that complaint was made by the victim of the alleged offense is admissible is merely to corroborate or confirm her testimony by showing consistent conduct on her part,¹⁰ the fact that such complaint was made cannot be shown when the female on whom the alleged offense was committed is not examined as a witness.¹¹ Thus, where the victim is a child of such tender years or a person of such inferior intelligence that she is not competent as a witness, evidence that a complaint was made by her is not admissible.¹² But the admission of evidence of the making of complaint by the prosecutrix before the prosecutrix herself testifies as a witness is not erroneous where she does subsequently testify.¹³

(5) Res Gestæ. — The fact that the complaint was made very soon after the alleged ravishment does not render the particulars of the complaint admissible in evidence as a part of the res gestæ; ¹ but of course the complaint and statement of the prosecutrix may, when made immediately after the offense was committed and in the presence of the accused, constitute part of the res gestæ, so as to render the particulars thereof admissible, not merely for the purpose of corroboration, but as direct evidence of the facts stated.²

(6) Cross-examination of Prosecutrix by Defense. — On cross-examination, the prosecutrix may, it has been held, be questioned as to the particulars of her complaint, where the fact that she made complaint has been brought out by the prosecution,³ and any contradictory statements relating to the offense, though made out of court, are admissible in evidence to impeach her testimony.⁴

g. CONDITION OF CLOTHING, PERSON, AND MIND OF PROSECUTRIX — Clothing. — The condition of the clothing of the prosecutrix after the alleged offense is to be considered upon the question of force and resistance by the prosecutrix, and from stains upon it to show penetration;⁵ and not only may witnesses testify as to the condition of the clothing as regards its being torn,⁶ but testimony is admissible as regards blood stains⁷ and stains from seminal fluid,⁸ to show actual carnal knowledge. Such testimony is not inadmissible on the ground that the clothing itself is the best evidence.⁹ The clothes themselves may, of course, be put in evidence,¹⁰ but they must be identified as those worn by the prosecutrix at the time of the offense.¹¹

Physical Conditions. — Marks of violence, such as bruises, etc., upon the person of the prosecutrix, are also elements for consideration upon the question of force and want of consent,¹² and witnesses may testify as to their existence upon the person of the prosecutrix after the commission of the alleged offense,¹³ and as to complaints by the prosecutrix as to the seat of pain from which she suffers.¹ So for the purpose of proving penetration the condition of the private parts of the victim after the commission of the alleged offense may be shown.² The condition of such parts should be and usually is shown by the testimony of a physician who has made an examination;³ still, it is not necessary that the witness who examined the prosecutrix should have been a physician to render him or her competent to testify as to the condition of such parts.⁴ The fact that the examination of the person of the female was not made immediately after the commission of the alleged offense does not render inadmissible the results of such examination,⁵ since such remoteness goes merely to the probative force of the evidence.⁶ The examination may, however, be so long after the offense as to render the result inadmissible as too remote.⁷ Evidence of the sickness of the child upon whom the offense was committed, following its commission, has been held to be admissible.⁸

In Snowden v. U. S., 2 App. Cas. (D. C.) 89, it was held that no inflexible rule as to the length of interval between the act charged and the complaint of the prosecutrix can be laid down to render the complaint admissible as res gestæ, and declarations of the prosecutrix made during the day of the outrage were admitted.

Mental Condition. — Evidence as to the mental condition of the prosecutrix after the commission of the alleged offense has frequently been admitted to show force on the part of the accused and resistance by the prosecutrix.⁹ The general mental condition of the prosecutrix prior to the commission of the offense may, as heretofore stated, be shown for consideration on the question whether there was sufficient resistance by her.¹⁰

h. CONDUCT OF MEMBERS OF PROSECUTRIX'S FAMILY. — The defense cannot show in the first instance that members of the family of the prosecutrix continued upon friendly relations with the accused after the alleged crime,¹¹ nor that they failed to take steps against him for private revenge;¹² and on the other hand the prosecution cannot show that members of her family did take steps for private revenge.¹³ For the purpose of impeaching the testimony of the members of the family of the prosecutrix, however, the defense may show that their relations with the accused continued to be

In State v. Evans, 138 Mo. 116, 60 Am. St. Rep. 549, the result of an examination four months after the prosecutrix reached the age of consent was held to be too remote in a prosecution for carnal knowledge of a child while under the age of consent.

friendly, or that there was delay on their part in taking steps for his apprehension,¹ but it has been held not to be error to instruct that the fact that the husband of the prosecutrix did not kill the accused was not to be considered as impeaching his testimony.²

i. DYING DECLARATIONS. — The dying declarations of the alleged victim are inadmissible in a prosecution for rape.³

j. EXPERT MEDICAL TESTIMONY. — Under general principles, which have been fully discussed in another title,⁴ the courts have recognized the admissibility of expert medical testimony to prove particular facts in prosecutions for rape.⁵

k. INFANT PROSECUTRIX AS WITNESS. — The general rules discussed in another part of this work with regard to the competency of infants as witnesses⁶ apply in prosecutions for rape in determining the competency as a witness of an infant of tender years upon whom the alleged offense was committed, the test of competency being the degree of intelligence of the proposed witness; that is, the capacity to distinguish between good and evil and the possession of sufficient knowledge.⁷

l. MOTIVE OF PROSECUTRIX. — Evidence is of course admissible to show that the motive of the prosecutrix or her family in instituting the prosecution is to extort money from the accused;⁸ and to impeach their testimony, evidence of offers to stop the prosecution for a consideration have been admitted.⁹

9. Offers to Stop Prosecution. — Huff v. State, 106 Ga. 432; Gaines v. State, 99 Ga. 704.

But it has been held that evidence merely that a civil suit has been instituted to recover damages for the alleged ravishment does not show a motive to extort money, and that the exclusion of such evidence is not error.¹

m. PRIOR SOLICITATION, THREATS, ETC. — Evidence of prior solicitations for sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix by the defendant has been held to be admissible, as showing lustful desires on the part of the defendant towards the prosecutrix.² Similarly, evidence of prior threats by the defendant to commit the rape has been held to be admissible.³ So evidence of prior statements of the defendant showing his carnal passion for the prosecutrix and his belief that she would not yield to his desires has been admitted.⁴

n. PHYSICAL EXAMINATION OF PROSECUTRIX. — Though it is not essential to a conviction for rape that evidence be introduced of a physical medical examination of the prosecutrix while the offense was recent, for the purpose of showing penetration and the use of force or violence upon her person,⁵ the question whether the result of an examination of the person of the prosecutrix is admissible in evidence has been discussed elsewhere in this title.⁶

o. PREGNANCY OF PROSECUTRIX AND OFFSPRING OF INTERCOURSE. — On a prosecution for the carnal knowledge of a child under the age of consent, evidence of her pregnancy and subsequent delivery is admissible.⁷

p. PROOF OF OTHER CRIMES. — The general rule in criminal law that the prosecution cannot show in evidence the commission of other crimes by the defendant⁸ applies generally in prosecutions for rape.⁹ On such trials, how-

Thus, in McMath v. State, 55 Ga. 303, it was held that the defendant might show that the mother, who was a witness, offered to drop the prosecution for a sum of money.

But where the mother was not a witness for the state, evidence of such an offer was held to be inadmissible. State v. Knock, 142 Mo. 515.

ever, as well as on those for assault with intent to commit rape, evidence of other crimes is admissible upon the same principles which regulate the exceptions to the general exclusion of evidence of other offenses.¹

Carnal Knowledge of Children. — In prosecutions for the carnal knowledge of an infant under the statutory age of consent, the authorities are in conflict on the question whether the prosecution may show in evidence more than one act of sexual intercourse between the prosecutrix and the defendant. According to the better doctrine it is held that such evidence is admissible, and should not be excluded on the ground that it tends to prove separate and distinct felonies.² In at least one jurisdiction, however, it has been held to be error to admit evidence of more than one act of intercourse between the defendant and the child.³ In some cases a distinction has been made between acts prior and acts subsequent to the offense charged, and evidence of the former is held to be admissible,⁴ while evidence of the latter is held to be inadmissible.⁵

6. Election. — People v. Castro, 133 Cal. 11; election is made by the defense the defendant cannot complain on appeal that no election was made.¹ In some jurisdictions the prosecution will be presumed to have elected to stand for conviction upon the act of intercourse to establish which it first introduced evidence, and unless the evidence is sufficient to prove this offense, the defendant is entitled to an acquittal;² though the rule has also been announced that in such a case the indictment will be deemed to cover the act of intercourse of which evidence is given nearest in period of time to the date of the indictment.³

g. RELATIONSHIP OR FRIENDSHIP BETWEEN PROSECUTRIX AND DEFENDANT. — The Relationship between the prosecutrix and the defendant may be of importance as bearing on the reasonableness of the prosecutrix's story and upon the degree of her resistance,⁴ and evidence of such relationship is admissible.⁵

Prior Friendly Relations. — The defendant may show that his previous relations with the prosecutrix were friendly, as tending to show the means by which he intended to accomplish and did accomplish the act of sexual intercourse.⁶ When the prosecution is for the carnal knowledge of a child under the age of consent, evidence that the relations between the defendant and the prosecutrix were intimate is admissible to show opportunity for intercourse and to corroborate the testimony of the prosecutrix;⁷ and evidence of previous harshness or ill treatment of the prosecutrix by the defendant, in whose family she lived, has been held to be admissible to explain her submission and show want of consent.⁸

2. Sufficiency — a. IN GENERAL. — The caution of Sir Matthew Hale that rape "is an accusation easily to be made and hard to be proved, and harder to be defended by the party accused, though never so innocent," and that the judges should be "the more cautious upon trials of offenses of this nature, wherein the court and jury may with so much ease be imposed upon without great care and vigilance, the heinousness of the offense many times transporting the judge and jury with so much indignation that they are over-hastily carried to the conviction of the person accused thereof by the confident testimony sometimes of malicious and false witnesses,"⁹ has frequently received the strong approbation of the courts in reviewing the testimony in such prosecutions.¹⁰

b. CORROBORATION OF PROSECUTRIX — (1) Common-law Rule. — It is a well-settled rule of the common law that in prosecutions for rape the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix may be sufficient to sustain a conviction,¹ even though the prosecutrix is a woman of previous unchaste character;² and even the uncorroborated testimony of an infant prosecutrix of tender years has been held to be sufficient to sustain a conviction.³

Rule Where Defendant Testifies in His Own Behalf. — In a few cases where the accused testified in his own behalf and directly and explicitly denied his guilt, it has been held that his testimony offset the testimony of the prosecutrix and that a conviction could not be had without corroboration of her testimony;⁴ but the better doctrine is undoubtedly that the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix may warrant a conviction even where the defendant as a witness denies his guilt.⁵

to caution the jury against the danger of conviction for rape on the testimony of the prosecutrix alone, uncorroborated by other evidence, direct or circumstantial,¹ it has been held that the failure to do so is not reversible error when the defendant did not request such an instruction.²

(2) Statutory Requirement. — In a few jurisdictions it is expressly provided by statute that the defendant in a prosecution for rape cannot be convicted on the testimony of the female ravished unless she is corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense.³ Under such statutes, however, the corpus delicti may be established by the testimony of the prosecutrix alone.⁴ Where the statute merely requires corroborative evidence to warrant a conviction for rape, it is not necessary that there should be corroborative evidence to warrant a conviction for assault with intent to commit rape.⁵

Sufficiency of Corroboration. — No general rule can be laid down as to what corroborative evidence is sufficient to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, so as to warrant a conviction, except that the corroborative evidence must point out the defendant and single him out from other persons as the perpetrator.⁶

c. CONFESSION. — The extrajudicial confession of guilt by the accused, whether it is made in express words or is to be implied from expressions, is not sufficient to warrant a conviction when the corpus delicti is not proved;⁷ but of course where the corpus delicti is also proved, it is sufficient.⁸

Attempt to Rape. — See People v. Gardner, 98 Cal. 127; State v. Hilsabeck, 132 Mo. 348; Givens v. Com., 29 Gratt. (Va.) 830; State v. Berzaman, 10 Wash. 277.

Where the statute punishes rape by imprisonment for life, and further provides that on conviction of attempt to commit crime the punishment may be fixed at one-half the longest term of imprisonment prescribed upon the conviction of the offense, a sentence of five years imprisonment on conviction of attempt to rape is warranted. People v. Gardner, 98 Cal. 127. See also State v. Berzaman, 10 Wash. 277.

Attempt by Negro or Slave on White Woman Punishable by Death — Early Statutes. — See Dennis v. State, 5 Ark. 230; Wash v. State, 14 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 120; State v. Davidson, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 184; Peter v. State, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 436. See also supra, this title, Attempt to Rape.

Prior to the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution statutes imposing the penalty of death in such cases were held to be constitutional, though for the same offense by a white man the penalty was only imprisonment. Charles v. State, 11 Ark. 389; Pleasant v. State, 13 Ark. 360.

2. See the local statutes.

Where the Statute Requires the Court to Fix the Punishment it is reversible error to delegate such discretion to the jury. Leoni v. State, 44 Ala. 110.

Instances of Punishment Not Interfered with by Appellate Court. — Dykes v. State, 64 Ga. 437 (twenty years for assault with intent to rape); State v. Baskett, 111 Mo. 271 (thirty years for rape of girl under fourteen years of age); State v. Rippey, 127 N. Car. 516 (ten years for rape of girl between ten and fourteen years of age); Asher v. Territory, 7 Okla. 188 (fifteen years for rape of girl under fourteen years of age); Johnson v. State, 26 Tex. App. 399 (death penalty); Mischer v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. 212 (death penalty); Murphy v. State, 108 Wis. 111 (twenty-five years, reducible by good conduct to fourteen years, for rape of girl of ten years).

Instances of Punishment Held Excessive on Appeal. — State v. Blunt, 77 Iowa 106 (fifteen years for assault with intent to rape child of tender years reduced to ten years); State v. Steffens, (Iowa 1902) 89 N. W. Rep. 974 (life sentence for rape of child when penetration, if effected at all, was but slight, and accused was intoxicated at the time, reduced to fifteen years).

4. Subsequent Prosecution for Rape Barred. — Where the indictments were founded on the same transactions, it has been held that a subsequent prosecution for rape was barred by:

Former Conviction for Attempt to Rape. — State v. Shepard, 7 Conn. 54. See also State v. Smith, 43 Vt. 324, arguendo as to a former conviction for assault with intent to rape.

Former Acquittal for Assault and Battery. — People v. Purcell, (Ct. Gen. Sess.) 16 N. Y. Supp. 199. Compare People v. Saunders, (Oyer & T. Ct.) 4 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 106.

So an Acquittal for Rape Has Been Held to Bar a Subsequent Prosecution for Adultery. — Com. v. McIlvain, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. 174, 5 Pa. Dist. 175.

A Prosecution for Fornication and Bastardy Is a Bar to a Subsequent Prosecution for Statutory Rape, based on the same transaction, in carnally knowing a female below the statutory age of consent. Com. v. Arner, 149 Pa. St. 35. Aliter where transactions may be different. Com. v. Walker, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 418.

Acquittal for Forcible Defilement Is No Bar to Prosecution for Conspiracy to Commit the Crime. State v. Brown, 95 Iowa 381.

Attempt to Rape and Attempt to Commit Burglary. — A former acquittal of an attempt to commit rape is not a bar to a prosecution for an attempt to commit burglary for the purpose

XV. CONDONATION. — The general rule that the person injured through the commission of a crime cannot by condoning or forgiving the offense relieve the accused from criminal prosecution ¹ applies fully to the crime of rape and kindred offenses.²

XVI. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. — In some jurisdictions the statutes limit the time within which prosecutions for rape and kindred offenses must be instituted.³

XVII. CIVIL ACTION. — A woman on whom rape has been committed may maintain a civil action for the injury, as in such a case the right of action does not merge in the crime; ⁴ and the same is of course true with regard to the injury from an assault with intent to rape or an indecent assault. The gist of the action in such cases is the force and violence, and of course the consent of the woman is a defense.⁵ In such actions, as in criminal prosecutions, the failure of the woman to complain ⁶ or the continued existence of friendly relations between the plaintiff and the defendant ⁷ is admissible as tending to show the falsity of the claim. On the other hand, evidence of recent complaint by the female is admissible in her favor to the same extent as in criminal prosecutions.⁸ Evidence of the good character of the defendant has been held to be admissible in such actions.⁹ Evidence that the defendant was living apart from his wife is not admissible as tending to establish the offense of which complaint is made.¹⁰

Upon the Question of Damages the defense may show the generally depraved character of the female,¹¹ but it cannot show specific acts of depravity on her part.¹² In such actions exemplary damages may undoubtedly be awarded.¹³ of committing the rape involved in the former indictment. Byas v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. 51. Compare Com. v. Reed, 4 Lanc. L. Rev. 89.

Rape and Incest Are Distinct, and an acquittal on the charge of rape is no bar to a subsequent prosecution for incest founded on the same transaction. Stewart v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 174, 60 Am. St. Rep. 35.

Rape and Attempt to Rape—Old Statute. — In North Carolina, under an early statute, it was held that an acquittal on an indictment for rape was not a bar to a subsequent prosecution for an attempt to rape by the accused, a negro, upon a white woman, such offense being also a capital felony. State v. Jesse, 3 Dev. & B. L. (20 N. Car.) 98.

1. Condonation. — See the title CRIMINAL LAW, vol. 8, p. 294.

2. Forgiveness of Accused by Victim No Defense. — Com. v. Slattery, 147 Mass. 423. See also State v. Harris, 150 Mo. 56; State v. Hammond, 77 Mo. 157.

The fact that the woman charged to have been assaulted made the complaint against the accused under the threats of her husband is no defense. This fact can only affect the wife's credibility as showing a false charge. Pratt v. State, 51 Ark. 167.

Subsequent Marriage of the Accused to the Victim, a girl under the age of consent, is no defense. State v. Newcomer, 59 Kan. 668.

Anciently, however, the female ravished might, if she pleased, redeem the accused from execution if she elected him for her husband and he consented thereto. 1 Hale P. C. 627.

RASH. — See note 1.

RASURE. — See the title ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS, vol. 2, p. 181.

RATABLE. — Ratable means capable of being appraised or assessed.² But the term "ratable property" is sometimes used in the sense of "taxable property."³

RATE. (See also RATIO, post.) — Rate is defined to be the price or amount stated or fixed on anything.⁴ The term is also used in the sense of proportion or percentage; a standard of valuation; a rule or measure of assessment; an assessment according to a given standard.⁵ It has also the meaning of a public valuation or assessment of every man's estate, or the ascertaining how much tax every one should pay, and may apply either to the percentage of taxation or to the valuation of property.⁶ In England, the term usually means a local tax; as, the county rate, the borough rate, the poor rate.⁷

1. Rash and Hazardous Speculation. — A rash and hazardous speculation is one in which no reasonable man or no man of ordinary commercial prudence under similar circumstances would venture to embark. Ex p. Fryer, 10 L. T. N. S. 197.

2. Ratable. — Reg. v. Malden, 10 B. & S. 323; Darrow v. Langdon, 20 Conn. 288; Coventry Co. v. Coventry, 16 R. I. 240; Tripp v. Torrey, 17 R. I. 362.

A statute required every owner of property to give in to the tax assessors an account showing his ratable estate. It was held that ratable, as thus used, meant capable of being appraised or assessed; that the word, therefore, was not synonymous with "taxable;" and that under the statute a return of "no ratable personal estate over and above the actual indebtedness of the company" was insufficient. Coventry Co. v. Coventry, 16 R. I. 240.

"Ratable property means property in its nature capable of being rated, and is not confined to property which would be actually inserted in a rate at a time the list is returned." Reg. v. Malden, L. R. 4 Q. B. 329. See also Reg. v. Hammersmith, 33 L. T. N. S. 183, 7 W. R. 524.

Ratable Value Equivalent to Appraised or Assessed Value. — See Darrow v. Langdon, 20 Conn. 292.

3. Ratable Estate Equivalent to Taxable Estate. — See State v. Camp Sing, 18 Mont. 145; Marshfield v. Middlesex, 55 Vt. 545.

Ratable Polls. — In Opinions of Justices, 7 Mass. 523, it was held that the polls of aliens might be ratable polls when made liable by the legislature to be rated for public taxes.

4. Price. — Raun v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 19, quoting Webst. Dict.

"Rate means price, value." Barrett v. Schooner Wacousta, 1 Flipp. (U. S.) 519, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,050.

Regular Rate. — In Martinsburg Bank v. Central Pennsylvania Telephone, etc., Co., 150 Pa. St. 36, it was held that what parties mean by the use of words in a parol contract is always a question of fact in the particular case, and that by the words "regular rates" for telephone service in the case at bar, were meant rates charged in the neighborhood.

Going Rate. — See GO, GOING, ETC., vol. 14, p. 1072.

5. Rate in Sense of Percentage, Proportion, and Degree. — State v. Mobile, etc., R. Co., 59 Ala. 325; People v. Dolan, 36 N. Y. 67.

Rate of Fare. — See FARE, vol. 12, p. 881.

Rate of Interest. (See also the title INTEREST, vol. 19, p. 1048 et seq.) — In Raun v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 19, it was said: "According to the common acceptance, the expression 'rate of interest' has reference to the percentage or amount of interest, and not to the manner of computing."

Rate Per Cent. — In Wilson v. Davis, 1 Mont. 195, it was said: "The term 'rate per cent.' whether used at common law or in statutes, so far as I have been able to learn, signifies so much per cent. on the principal."

6. Tax. — State v. Camp Sing, 18 Mont. 145; State v. Utter, 34 N. J. L. 494; Coventry Co. v. Coventry, 16 R. I. 240; Atty.-Gen. v. Eau Claire, 37 Wis. 426.

In People v. Weaver, 100 U. S. 545, it was said: "There can be no rate or percentage without a valuation."

In Bressler v. Wayne County, 32 Neb. 842, it was said: "The word rate, as used in this section, applies as well to the valuation of the shares of the stockholder as to the ratio of tax to be levied thereon."

Rate Dependent upon Connection in Which Used. — In Darrow v. Langdon, 20 Conn. 295, it was said: "The word rate is frequently used as synonymous with 'tax,' and often as the public valuation on which the tax is laid; and what it means in a particular instance must depend upon its connection as applied to the subject-matter."

Rate and Impose. — In State v. Camp Sing, 18 Mont. 128, it was held that the intent of a section of the constitution to refer to taxation proper, and not to licenses, was expressed by the use of the word "levy," "assess," and rate, when speaking of taxes, and the use of the word "impose" when speaking of licenses.

7. Rate. — State v. Camp Sing, 18 Mont. 145, quoting And. L. Dict.

Rates, Taxes, and Assessments. — But in Baylis v. Jiggins, (1898) 2 Q. B. 315, it was held that expenses of paving, etc., of a street, under the English Public Health Act of 1875, could not be recovered by the owner from his tenant under a covenant by the tenant to pay "all rates, taxes, and assessments whatsoever." See also Hartley v. Hudson, 4 C. P. D. 367; Wilkinson v. Collyer, 13 Q. B. D. 1. And see the titles SPECIAL OR LOCAL ASSESSMENTS; TAXATION.

RATIFY — RATIFICATION. (See also the titles AGENCY, vol. 1, p. 1181 et seq.; PROMOTERS; TAXATION.) — To ratify is to give validity to the act of another, and the act of ratification implies that the person or body ratifying has at the time power to do the act ratified.¹ Ratification is the confirmation of a previous act done either by the party himself or by another; it is the confirmation of a voidable act.² The term is used, as applying to the unauthorized contracts of one acting as an agent or representative of another, to contracts made during infancy, to treaties, and to the amendment of written constitutions, in the sense of "confirmation," "adoption," and "affirmation."³ It is said, however, that "ratification" applies properly only to agency.⁴

Existing Person. — A ratification, properly so called, implies an existing person, on whose behalf the contract might have been made at the time. There cannot, in law, be a ratification of a contract which could not have been made binding on the ratifier at the time when it was made because the ratifier was not then in existence.⁵

1. Ratify. — Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 451. See also Marsh v. Fulton County, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 676; McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 623; State v. Ward, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 130.

New Proceeding. — To ratify means to confirm acts already done, not to authorize new proceedings in the future. Barker v. Chesterfield, 102 Mass. 128.

2. Ratification. — Ft. Scott First Nat. Bank v. Drake, 29 Kan. 324, quoting Burr. L. Dict.

Ratification means the confirmation of an act not before binding, making it good, agreeing to or adopting it. Scott v. Buchanan, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 470.

"Ratification is the adopting and making some previous act one's own." Hatton v. Stewart, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 234.

"Ratification is an agreement to adopt an act performed by another for us." Bouv. L. Dict., quoted in Evans v. Buckner, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 294, and Hatton v. Stewart, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 235.

In Ansonia v. Cooper, 64 Conn. 544, it was said: "Ratification means the adoption by a person, as binding upon himself, of an act done in such relations that he may claim it as done for his benefit, although done under such circumstances as would not bind him except for his subsequent assent; as where an act was done by a stranger having at the time no authority to act as his agent, or by an agent not having adequate authority. The acceptance of the results of the act with an intent to ratify, and with full knowledge of all the material circumstances, is a ratification." See also Curnane v. Scheidel, 70 Conn. 13.

Ratification May Be Express or Implied. — Evans v. Buckner, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 294; Hatton v. Stewart, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 235.

Knowledge. — "A ratification supposes a knowledge of the thing ratified." Blenn v. Bear River, etc., Min. Co., 20 Cal. 613, quoted in San Diego, etc., R. Co. v. Pacific Beach Co., 112 Cal. 53.

Acquiescence and Ratification Distinguished. — In Moore v. Robinson, 62 Ala. 547, it was said: "Acquiescence is not necessarily ratification, though evidence tending to prove it." See generally ACQUIESCENCE, vol. 1, p. 570.

Ratification and Estoppel Distinguished. — See the title ESTOPPEL, vol. 11, p. 446.

Ratification of Contracts by Married Women. — See the titles HUSBAND AND WIFE, vol. 15, p. 785; SEPARATE PROPERTY OF MARRIED WOMEN.

Ratification of Treaty. — See the title TREATIES. Partner's Ratification of Acts of Copartner. — See the title PARTNERSHIP, vol. 22, pp. 136, 144, 159.

Ratification of Acts of Officers of Corporation. — See the title OFFICERS AND AGENTS OF PRIVATE CORPORATIONS, vol. 21, p. 853.

Ratification of Acts of Public Officers. — See the title PUBLIC OFFICERS, ante.

3. Confirmation, Adoption, etc. — See Pearsoil v. Chapin, 44 Pa. St. 17; Scales v. Johnson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 41 S. W. Rep. 830; and an article on The Law of Ratification, 19 Cent. L. J. 482, where such use is condemned. See also ADOPT, vol. 1, p. 724; CONFIRMATION, vol. 6, p. 588.

Adoption and Ratification as Relating to Contracts Used Synonymously. — Stanton v. New York, etc., R. Co., 59 Conn. 285; Schreyer v. Turner Flouring Co., 29 Oregon 1. See also Ellison v. Jackson Water Co., 12 Cal. 551. Compare Blood v. La Serena Land, etc., Co., 113 Cal. 221; Mitchell v. Minnesota F. Assoc., 48 Minn. 278; McArthur v. Times Printing Co., 48 Minn. 319.

Ratify and Confirm Distinguished. — See Blood v. La Serena Land, etc., R. Co., 113 Cal. 221. See also CONFIRMATION, vol. 6, p. 588.

Recognition, Ratification, Confirmation, and Adoption. — But in Byrne v. Doughty, 13 Ga. 52, it was said: "Recognition, confirmation, adoption, and ratification are used indifferently in the books, as having substantially the same legal import."

"Ratification is in general the adoption of a previously formed contract, notwithstanding the vice that rendered it relatively void." Hill v. Indianapolis, 92 Fed. Rep. 469. See also Reid v. Field, 83 Va. 33.

4. Term Properly Applies Only to Agency. — Clough v. Clough, 73 Me. 487, 40 Am. Rep. 386; Adams v. Bateman, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 29 S. W. Rep. 1128.

5. Existing Person. — In re Empress Engineering Co., 16 Ch. D. 128; Melhado v. Porto Alegre, etc., R. Co., L. R. 9 C. P. 505; Kelner v. Baxter, L. R. 2 C. P. 185; McArthur v. Times Printing Co., 48 Minn. 319. See also

Form or Mode. — Where authority to do a particular act can originally be conferred only in a particular form or mode, the ratification must follow the same form or mode. Thus, where an authority to do any particular act on the part of a corporation can be conferred by ordinance only, a ratification of such act can be by ordinance alone.¹

Relation. — Ratification relates back to the beginning of the thing ratified and renders it obligatory from the outset.²

RATING. (See also the titles MARINE INSURANCE, vol. 19, p. 930; SHIPS AND SHIPPING.) — See note 3.

RATIO. (See also PROPORTION, ante; RATE, ante.) — Ratio is variously defined to be "the relation between two numbers or two magnitudes of the same kind;" "the relation between two similar magnitudes in respect to quantity;" "the relation between two similar quantities in respect to how many times one makes so many times the other;" "especially, the relation expressed by indicating the division of one quantity by the other, or by the factor that multiplied into one will produce the other."⁴

RAVINE. — A ravine is defined to be a deep and narrow hollow, usually worn by a stream or torrent of water; a gorge; a mountain cleft.⁵

RAVISH. (See also the title RAPE, ante.) — To ravish is to constipate by force; to deflower by violence; to violate; to debauch; to defile by force.⁶

Force. — The word "ravish" implies force and violence in the man and want of consent in the woman.⁷

RAWHIDE LEATHER. — See note 9.

Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 451; Marsh v. Fulton County, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 676.

1. Form or Mode. — McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 623, quoted in State v. Ward, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 130.

2. Relation. — Grenada County v. Brogden, 112 U. S. 261; Los Angeles City Water Co. v. Los Angeles, 88 Fed. Rep. 742; Hill v. Indianapolis, 92 Fed. Rep. 469; Marsh v. Fulton County, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 676; Sykes v. Columbus, 55 Miss. 137; Municipal Security Co. v. Baker County, 33 Oregon 338; Nashville v. Hagan, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 505; Scales v. Johnson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 41 S. W. Rep. 830; Reid v. Field, 83 Va. 33.

Equivalent to Previous Authority. — Ratification is equivalent to previous authority. It operates upon the act ratified in the same manner as though the authority had been originally given. Marsh v. Fulton County, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 676; Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 451; McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 623; Zottman v. San Francisco, 20 Cal. 102; State v. Ward, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 130.

3. Rating of Vessel. — In Orient Mut. Ins. Co. v. Wright, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 472, it was said: "What is meant by the rating of vessels in insurance policies? It means the determination of their relative state or condition in regard to their insurable qualities."

4. Ratio. — Matter of Klock, 30 N. Y. App. Div. 41, quoting Cent. Dict.; Worcester's Dict.; Standard Dict.

In Shattuck v. Balcom, 170 Mass. 251, it was said: "From the connection in which it is found, we think that the word ratio imports a payment to certain persons in certain proportions."

5. Ravine. — Gibbs v. Williams, 25 Kan. 217.

Bridge over Ravine — Bridge over Stream. — See Long v. Boone County, 36 Iowa 60.

6. Ravish. — Harper v. Delp, 3 Ind. 230, quoting Johnson's Dict. In this case, which was an action for slander, the court said: "The word ravish has, no doubt, other significations; but when used in the connection it here is — when it is said that a man was seen ravishing a cow — we must consider the natural meaning of the words to be that the person so seen was committing the crime of bestiality and buggery with the cow."

7. Force and Want of Consent. — Leoni v. State, 44 Ala. 110; Com. v. Scannel, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 547; Com. v. Fogerty, 8 Gray (Mass.) 489; People v. Willett, 105 Mich. 110; O'Connell v. State, 6 Minn. 279; State v. Daly, 16 Oregon 240; Harman v. Com., 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 69; Walling v. State, 7 Tex. App. 626; Gibson v. State, 17 Tex. App. 574; Gutierrez v. State, 44 Tex. 587; Williams v. State, 1 Tex. App. 90.

Rape and Ravish. — In McComas v. State, 11 Mo. 117, it was said: "The words 'rape' and ravish are used here as in common parlance as synonymous terms, and the only difference in the statute between the two species of the offense is that the latter contemplates force, whilst the former may consist in the act of sexual intercourse alone — irrespective of actual violence or consent."

But in Davis v. State, 42 Tex. 228, it was held that at common law an indictment for rape must charge that the accused "did ravish," etc., and that the use of the noun "rape" instead of the verb ravish was insufficient.

8. Carnal Knowledge Included. — Sullivant v. State, 8 Ark. 404; Com. v. Fogerty, 8 Gray (Mass.) 490; O'Connell v. State, 6 Minn. 279; Fields v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. 488; Gibson v. State, 17 Tex. App. 574.

9. Rawhide Leather. — See Weatherhead v. Coupe, 147 U. S. 327.

RAW MATERIAL. — See note 1.

RAZOR. — A razor is a sharp instrument or tool used for shaving purposes.²

READ. — See note 3.

READINESS TO PAY. — See the title TENDER.

READING. (See also the title STATUTES.) — “Reading” means the act of making known the contents of a written or printed document.⁵

READY — READINESS. — Ready is defined as prepared at the moment; not behindhand or backward when called upon; causing no delay for lack of being fitted or furnished; prepared in mind or disposition; not reluctant; willing; free; inclined; disposed.⁶

1. Raw Material. — A statute provided that any individual or association engaged in mining or manufacturing who should, for a specified time, refuse to pay the furnisher of any ore, clay, coal, or other raw material should become liable to a receivership. It was held that by raw material was not meant only “such raw material as became incorporated in the course of manufacture with the product evolved,” and that a debt for coal was within the statute. Hicks v. Consolidated Coal Co., 77 Md. 91.

2. Razor. — Scott v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1901) 62 S. W. Rep. 420.

Deadly Weapon. — In State v. Nelson, 38 La. Ann. 942, a razor was held not to be a dangerous weapon. Compare State v. Larkin, 24 Mo. App. 412. And see the title CARRYING WEAPONS, vol. 5, p. 737, note.

3. Read. — In Matter of Paikuli, 8 Hawaii 680, it was held that where a statute required in a voter the ability to read, this meant an ability to read printed or written text with reasonable fluency and to comprehend the meaning. See also the title ELECTIONS, vol. 10, p. 592.

Read and Write — Jurors. — See the title JURY AND JURY TRIAL, vol. 17, p. 1118.

4. Readily. — Western Coal, etc., Co. v. Berberich, (C. C. A.) 94 Fed. Rep. 334, quoting Cent. Dict. and Standard Dict., and holding that an instruction that it was the duty of the master to use all appliances readily attainable for the protection of his servants was not erroneous.

Readily Seen. — In an action for personal injuries resulting from falling into an excavation made by the defendant, the trial court instructed the jury to find for the defendant if it believed from the evidence that an electric light furnished sufficient light for the excavation to be readily seen by a person exercising ordinary care. The appellate court said: “The term ‘readily seen,’ in the connection in which it appears in the charge, while not happily employed, is the equivalent of ‘patent’ or ‘obvious,’ which are the terms generally used in legal parlance in stating the rule under consideration.” Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 67 S. W. Rep. 771.

5. Reading. — New Orleans v. Brooks, 36 La. Ann. 642, quoting Bouv. L. Dict.

Reading Matter. — In Kanopolis Land Co. v. Morgan, 1 Kan. App. 68, it was held that what constitutes reading matter as distinguished from advertisements in a newspaper, was not a question of law to be determined by the court. The court said: “What might be properly considered ‘reading matter’ under some circumstances, under other and different circumstances would not be so classified. No certain or fixed rule can probably be applied to enable a court, from a mere inspection of a newspaper, to say to what particular class of printed matter every insertion should belong.”

6. Ready. — State v. Gooch, 105 Mo. 398, quoting Webst. Dict.

Ability. — In Rawson v. Johnson, 1 East 203, it was held, in an action for nondelivery of malt which the defendant had undertaken to deliver on request at a certain price, that it was sufficient for the plaintiff in his declaration to aver such request and that he was ready and willing to receive and pay for the malt, as a readiness to pay implies an ability as well as a willingness to do so. See also Morton v. Lamb, 7 T. R. 125.

A real-estate broker found a purchaser who “was ready to carry out the contract.” It was held that the word ready implied that the purchaser was able and willing to carry out the contract. Smith v. Keeler, 51 Ill. App. 268.

In Lawrence v. Knowles, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 399, 35 E. C. L. 150, Bosanquet, J., said: “I cannot conceive any circumstance more indicative of want of readiness than incapacity.” See also De Medina v. Norman, 9 M. & W. 827.

Assault. — Upon a prosecution for assault the trial court instructed the jury that if one of the defendants committed the alleged assault and the other defendants were present and ready if necessary to aid, assist, or encourage the defendant in making the assault, such other defendants were also guilty. Counsel for the defendants objected to the use of the word ready instead of the words ordinarily used in such connection, viz., “for the purpose and with the intent to aid and assist if necessary.” The appellate court, however, refused to sustain this contention, saying: “We think the words ‘ready,’ if necessary, to aid and assist,” convey substantially the same meaning.” State v. Gooch, 105 Mo. 398.

Ready to Discharge. — By a charter-party time for delivery was to “count when steamer is ready to discharge.” There was only one customary place of discharge at the port in question, and when the steamer arrived at port that place was occupied. It was held

READY MONEY. (See also the titles MONEY, vol. 20, p. 837; WILLS.)—It has been held that under a bequest of "ready money" funds of the testator in bank will pass, and this whether in the form of a balance on a running account, a deposit, or a sum withdrawable after notice.¹

REAL.—See the title REASONABLE DOUBT, post.

REAL ACTIONS. (See also the title REAL ACTIONS, 17 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 669.)—Real actions are such as are brought for the specific recovery of a freehold estate in lands, without regard to any damages for the wrongful detention.²

REAL CHATTELS. (See also CHATTELS, vol. 5, p. 1022, and see REAL ESTATE, post.)—See note 3.

REAL COST.—The terms "actual cost," "real cost," and "prime cost" are phrases of equivalent import, and mean the true and real price paid for goods upon a genuine bona fide purchase.⁴

REAL COVENANTS.—See the title COVENANTS, vol. 8, p. 52.

that the steamer was not ready to discharge, and the time for delivery did not, therefore, begin until she was at the customary place of discharge in the port. Sanders v. Jenkins, (1897) 1 Q. B. 93.

1. Ready Money.—Fryer v. Ranken, 11 Sim. 55; Parker v. Marchant, Y. & C. Ch. 290, 12 L. J. Ch. 385; Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Jur. 401; Tallent v. Scott, (1868) W. N. 236; Stein v. Ritherdon, (1868) W. N. 65; Smith v. Burch, 92 N. Y. 228, reversing 28 Hun (N. Y.) 332. See also Smith v. Butler, 9 Ir. Eq. 398, 3 J. & La. T. 565; Bevan v. Bevan, 5 L. R. Ir. 57; Vaisey v. Reynolds, 5 Russ. 12, 6 L. J. Ch. 172; Knight v. Knight, 2 Giff. 616, 30 L. J. Ch. 644.

By an antenuptial settlement the woman's property, consisting of land and slaves in which she had but a life estate and a little personality which she held absolutely, was conveyed to trustees in trust for her sole and separate use, and it was further provided that the ready money accruing out of such separate estate should from time to time be put out at interest and invested as she should direct. It was held that the term ready money meant surplus interest accruing during coverture. Staggers v. Matthews, 13 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 142.

Interest—Rent.—In Fryer v. Ranken, 11 Sim. 55, it was held that the rent of a house and the interest on a sum due on a mortgage did not pass by the bequest of ready money.

Dividends.—In May v. Grave, 3 De G. & Sm. 462, 18 L. J. Ch. 407, it was held that the words ready money did not include unreceived dividends of stock. But in Cooke v. Wagster, 2 Smale & G. 296, 23 L. J. Ch. 496, it was said that this case could not be reconciled with Parker v. Marchant, 1 Phil. 356, 12 L. J. Ch. 385, and Fryer v. Ranken, 11 Sim. 55, 9 L. J. Ch. 337.

Legacy.—A testatrix bequeathed to her husband all the ready money which she might have at the bank or elsewhere. Before her death her husband had collected for her a legacy, which money he retained in his own hands until her death. It was held that this sum passed under the bequest of ready money. Smith v. Burch, 92 N. Y. 228, reversing 28 Hun (N. Y.) 332.

2. Real Actions.—4 Min. Inst. 339.

"The essential and distinguishing fact that gives an action the character of a real action is that it seeks to recover specifically the land and its possession." Hall v. Decker, 48 Me. 255, citing Stephen's Pl. 3.

3. A Real Chattel Is a Leasehold Estate.—Westervelt v. People, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 420; Ex p. Leland, 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 461. See also Warren v. Leland, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 619.

4. Real Cost.—U. S. v. 16 Packages Goods, 2 Mason (U. S.) 53, where it was said that the words were wholly inapplicable to cases of a gift or voluntary conveyance, or where anything but money or its equivalent mingled substantially in the consideration. See also ACTUAL—ACTUALLY, vol. 1, p. 602, note.

5. Real Danger.—Upon a trial for murder the court instructed the jury as follows: "It would be immaterial whether the danger was real, provided the defendant acted upon the real appearance of danger." This instruction was objected to by counsel for the defendant because "it limits and abridges the right of the defendant to act upon real appearances of danger, and omits reasonable appearances of danger." The appellate court, per Hurt, J., said: "Danger, with reference to whether the appearance of it is real or reasonable, takes its classification under one or the other according as whether the manifestations are positive, threatening, and imminent, or are merely such as reasonably create alarm and apprehension for one's safety. Real danger is a danger such as is manifest to the physical senses; 'reasonable' danger, as the very force of the term imports, is something to be judged of by an exercise of reason and judgment, exercised upon acts which require construction to render their meaning apparent. It is manifest from the facts in evidence that whatever danger there was to appellant, if any at all, was real, and hence the court discharged its duty when it instructed the jury upon that character of danger, it not being bound to instruct upon another form of danger which the facts not only did not present, but absolutely precluded." Allen v. State, 24 Tex. App. 225. See also the title SELF-DEFENSE.

Real Probable Danger.—In an action against a city for damages to property from the prox.

REAL ESTATE. (See also the titles CONVERSION AND RECONVERSION, vol. 7, p. 463; FIXTURES, vol. 13, p. 594; ICE, vol. 15, p. 907; LICENSE (REAL PROPERTY), vol. 18, p. 1127; PERSONAL PROPERTY, vol. 22, p. 746; PROPERTY, ante; REAL PROPERTY, post; RECORDING ACTS; STATUTE OF FRAUDS; TAXATION; TREES AND TIMBER. And see LAND, vol. 18, p. 140.)—Real estate is the interest which a man has in lands, tenements, or hereditaments.¹ The term means something that may be held by tenure, or that will pass to the heir of the possessor at his death instead of to his administrator, including lands, tenements, and hereditaments, whether the latter be corporeal or incorporeal.² So the term has been defined by numerous statutes to embrace lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interests therein, equitable as well as legal.³ The term "real estate" may denote the quantum or interest which one has in land or it may denote the land itself.⁴ In the note will be found a number of cases in which the courts have construed certain interests to be or not to be real estate.⁵

imity of a pesthouse the trial court instructed the jury that in order to authorize a recovery there must have been a real probable danger from smallpox being communicated through the atmosphere from such pesthouse. In holding that there was no reversible error in this instruction the court said: "The court evidently intended by the term 'real probable danger' to say that the probable danger must be an actual fact, as distinct from one solely imaginary or apprehended." Paducah v. Allen, (Ky. 1901) 63 S. W. Rep. 984.

4. Fox v. Phelps, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 399. And see ESTATE, vol. 11, p. 358, and the title PROPERTY, ante.

5. Annuities. (See also the title ANNUITIES, vol. 2, p. 391.) — In Meason's Estate, 4 Watts (Pa.) 347, it was said: "In Stafford v. Buckley, 2 Ves. 170, Lord Hardwicke said: 'An annuity in fee, granted out of the four and a half per cent. duties upon goods exported from the West Indies, is a personal hereditament.' He was of opinion that it was a mere personal annuity, having no relation to lands or tenements, nor partaking of the nature of rent, which savors of the realty. I think it plain that if it had savored of the realty, the chancellor would have been of the opinion that it was a real and not a personal hereditament."

Buildings. — Real estate includes buildings erected upon the land. Dooley v. Crist, 25 Ill. 556; Mathes v. Dobschuetz, 72 Ill. 441; Matzon v. Griffin, 78 Ill. 477.

In Portland, etc., R. Co. v. Saco, 60 Me. 196, it was held that a statute providing that the track of a railroad and the land on which it was constructed should not be deemed real estate for purposes of taxation did not apply to and exempt from taxation depots and other erections of railroad corporations upon land owned by them.

Buildings Erected on Leased Ground. — In Knapp v. Jones, 38 Ill. App. 489, affirmed 143 Ill. 375, it was held that a building erected by a lessee on leased ground was not personal property so that at the expiration of two years from the date of a mortgage thereon the mortgagee must take possession or lose his lien as against execution creditors, but that such a building was a chattel real, and under the statutes of Illinois referring to the recording of incumbrances was to be classed as real estate.

A mortgage on a building erected on leased land under an agreement that the lessee might remove it or the lessor should pay for it at its appraised value has been held to be a mortgage on realty, falling within the designation of a chattel real at common law. Griffin v. Marine Co., 52 Ill. 130; Stafford v. Adair, 57 Vt. 66.

Dividends Held Not to Be Real Estate. — See Jersey City Gaslight Co. v. United Gas Imp. Co., (C. C. A.) 58 Fed. Rep. 323.

Easements Are Real Estate. — Ray v. Sweeney, 14 Bush (Ky.) 7; Brower v. Tichenor, 41 N. J. L. 345; Adee v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 72 N. Y. App. Div. 404; In re Metropolitan El. R. Co., (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 2 N. Y. Supp. 278. And see the title EASEMENTS, vol. 10, p. 399.

Real Estate Includes Equitable Estate. — Lowry v. Wright, 15 Ill. 97; Wallace v. Monroe, 22

Ill. App. 611; Blain v. Stewart, 2 Iowa 378; Seever v. Delashmutter, 11 Iowa 177; Burton v. Hintrager, 18 Iowa 351; Livingston v. Newkirk, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 316; Avery v. Dufrees, 9 Ohio 147.

Equity of Redemption. — See the title EQUITY OF REDEMPTION, vol. 11, pp. 209, 210.

Franchises. — See FRANCHISES, vol. 14, p. 4.

Growing Crops. (See also the title CROPS, vol. 8, p. 303 et seq.) — Growing crops were held to be real estate. Bagley v. Columbus Southern R. Co., 98 Ga. 626.

In Ralston v. Ralston, 3 Greene (Iowa) 534, the court said: "The growing wheat was an interest which belonged to the soil; it was an interest embraced in the phrase real estate."

As to when growing crops are not realty, see the title CROPS, vol. 8, p. 308, and see Hecht v. Dettman, 56 Iowa 679.

Growing Trees. — See infra, this note, Trees.

Hereditaments. — In Meason's Estate, 4 Watts (Pa.) 347, it was said: "Wherever a perpetual inheritance is granted, as here, which arises out of lands, or is in any degree connected with or, as it is emphatically expressed by Lord Coke, exercisable within it, it is that sort of property which the law denominates 'real property.'"

Ice. — See the title ICE, vol. 15, pp. 907, 908.

Improvements. — Real estate embraces not only land, but all improvements of a permanent character placed upon the land. Mathes v. Dobschuetz, 72 Ill. 441. See also White v. Butt, 32 Iowa 335.

Lease. (See also supra, this note, Buildings.) — At common law the term real estate does not include a lease. Senow v. Fones, 48 Ark. 566; Buhl v. Kenyon, 11 Mich. 249; Grever v. Fox, 36 Mich. 459; Despard v. Churchill, 53 N. Y. 199; State Trust Co. v. Casino Co., 5 N. Y. App. Div. 387; People v. Westervelt, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 674; New York v. Mabie, 13 N. Y. 159. See also Tone v. Brace, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 566. Compare Kinney v. Watts, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 38.

But a lease may be real estate by statute. McKee v. Howe, 17 Colo. 538; Melhop v. Meinhardt, 70 Iowa 685.

In Dennis's Appeal, 72 Conn. 369, the term real estate was held to include a lease for nine hundred and ninety-nine years.

Same — Curtesy. (See also the title CURTESY, vol. 8, p. 518.) — In Lewis v. Glass, 92 Tenn. 147, it was held that a husband could not have curtesy in the leaseholds of his wife, although by statute it was provided that the term real estate should include the lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interests therein, equitable as well as legal.

Manure. — See MANURE, vol. 19, p. 927, and see Snow v. Perkins, 60 N. H. 493, 49 Am. Rep. 333.

Mining Claims Are Real Estate. — See the title MINES AND MINING CLAIMS, vol. 20, p. 775; and see Black v. Elkhorn Min. Co., 49 Fed. Rep. 549; Hughes v. Devlin, 23 Cal. 505.

Mortgages. — See the title MORTGAGES, vol. 20, p. 973.

Navigation. — In Buckeridge v. Ingram, 2 Ves. Jr. 652, it was held that shares in the navigation of the river Avon, under the statute of 10 Anne, were real estate. See also Drybutter v. Bartholomew, 2 P. Wms. 127.

But that the right of navigation generally is not real estate, see the title NAVIGABLE WATERS, vol. 21, p. 440.

Pews. — See the title PEWS AND PEW RIGHTS, vol. 22, p. 769.

Pier. — In Bedlow v. Stillwell, 91 Hun (N. Y.) 386, affirmed 158 N. Y. 292, it was held that the owner of a fee in a public street had an interest in real estate subject to dower in a pier built on the south side of the street with the permission of the city.

A Pipe Line Is Real Estate. — Tide-water Pipe Line Co. v. Berry, 52 N. J. L. 312, 53 N. J. L. 212.

Railroad Tracks. (See also the title RAILROADS, ante.) — Railroad tracks have been held not to be real estate for purposes of taxation. Detroit v. Detroit City R. Co., 76 Mich. 421; State v. District Ct., 31 Minn. 354. See also People v. Fredericks, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 177, affirmed 48 N. Y. 70.

In State v. District Ct., 31 Minn. 354, it was held that a portion of the track of a street-railway company in a public street was not real estate within a tax act. See also State v. Anderson, 90 Wis. 550.

But in New Haven v. Fair Haven, etc., R. Co., 38 Conn. 422, it was held that the rails, sleepers, ties, and spikes of a horse-railroad company so laid into and attached to the soil of the street as to become part of the realty were real estate.

Right to Herbage. (See also the title PROFIT A PRENDRE, ante.) — In Laws v. Eltringham, 8 Q. B. D. 283, it was held, where the soil of a town moor was vested in the corporation of the town in fee, but freemen of the town were, by statute, entitled to the "full right and benefit to the herbage" of the town moor for two milch cows each, that this right to the herbage was not "any real and personal property whatsoever," within the meaning of the English Malicious Injuries to Property Act, 24 & 25 Vict., c. 97, § 52.

Sawdust, Shavings, etc. — In Jenkins v. McCurdy, 48 Wis. 628, it was held that while "slabs, sawdust, shavings, and other refuse matter," used to fill up low and marshy ground, may be a part of the realty, "slabs and pieces of lumber suitable for firewood, piled up on the premises and intended to be used and removed as such," were personal property.

Tax Sale. — In McNeil v. Carter, 57 Ark. 579, it was held that where land has been sold for taxes, the interest of the former owner during the period allowed for redemption is real estate. See generally the title TAX TITLES. Compare the title EQUITY OF REDEMPTION, vol. 11, p. 213.

Trees. — See Owens v. Lewis, 46 Ind. 488, and see the title TREES AND TIMBER.

Water Main. (See also the titles TAXATION; WATERWORKS AND WATER COMPANIES.) — In Colorado Fuel, etc., Co. v. Pueblo Water Co., 11 Colo. App. 352, it was held that water mains, pipes, and hydrants laid in the streets of a city were realty for the purposes of taxation.

Possession. — Possession of land under a contract of purchase is real estate.¹

Life Estates — Remainders. — The term "real estate" applies as well to life estates or estates in remainder as to absolute or entire fees.²

Water Rights Held to Be Interest in Real Estate. — Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Concord, 66 N. H. 562; Winnipiseogee Lake Cotton, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Gilford, 64 N. H. 337. And see the titles RIPARIAN RIGHTS; WATERS AND WATER-COURSES.

1. Possession. (See also supra, the next preceding note, Lease.) — Land v. Hopkins, 7 Ala. 118; White v. Butt, 32 Iowa 335; Brent v. Robertson, 16 Mo. 149; Quell v. Hanlin, 81 Mo. 441; Block v. Morrison, 112 Mo. 351; Jackson v. Scott, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 94; Jackson v. Parker, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 73; Van Camp v. Peerenboom, 14 Wis. 69. And see the titles STATUTE OF FRAUDS; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Public Lands. (See also the title PUBLIC LANDS, ante.) — The term real estate has been held to include possessory claims of the public lands of the United States, whether those lands were mineral or non-mineral. State v. Moore, 12 Cal. 56; Gillett v. Gaffney, 3 Colo. 360; Salisbury v. Lane, (Idaho 1900) 63 Pac. Rep. 386; Ross v. Outagamie County, 12 Wis. 39.

In Courtney v. Missoula County, 21 Mont. 591, it was held that such lands were subject to taxation as the real estate of the purchaser after the sale and before the price was fully paid. See also Edgington v. Cook, 32 Neb. 551.

Widow's Interest. — In Burns v. Bangert, 92 Mo. 167, where by the terms of a husband's will the widow was to have the use, possession, and control of his farm for twenty years, in consideration of which she was to rear and educate the children of the marriage, and at the expiration of the term she was to have absolutely one-fifth part of the farm, her interest under the will was held to be real estate.

Vendee in Possession — Vendor's Interest. — But the vendor's interest in land after he has received part of the purchase money and put the vendee in possession is not real estate. Jones v. Howard, 142 Mo. 123; Black v. Long, 60 Mo. 182; Parks v. People's Bank, 97 Mo. 133; Davis v. Owenby, 14 Mo. 170.

Possession Not Necessary. — And possession is not necessary to constitute an interest in land real estate. Scarborough v. Smith, 18 Kan. 409.

2. Life Estates and Remainders. — Cooper v. Hepburn, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 563; Faulkner v. Davis, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 671. See also Stull v. Graham, 60 Ark. 461.

Contingent Remainders or Executory Devises. — In Nutter v. Russell, 3 Met. (Ky.) 163, it was held that a contingent remainder or an interest in the nature of an executory devise was included in the term real estate. See also Matter of Dodge, 105 N. Y. 590.

CROSS-REFERENCES.

See the title AGENCY, vol. 1, p. 930, and the references there given.

I. DEFINITION. — Real-estate brokers are those who make a business of negotiating or assisting in negotiating for others the sale, purchase, or exchange of real property; in addition to which they frequently plan and obtain loans on real-estate mortgage security, collect rents, and attend to the leasing of houses and lands.¹ They are often called real-estate agents, and sometimes land brokers or agents. In this article they are frequently termed merely brokers.

II. TERMINOLOGY — Owner. — In this article the term "owner" is used in its obvious sense as denoting the one who owns the property which he has employed the broker to sell or lease.

1. Definition. — See the title BROKERS, vol. 4, p. 962. And see also McCullough v. Hitchcock, 71 Conn. 401; Farnsworth v. Hemmer, 1 Allen (Mass.) 494, 79 Am. Dec. 756; Brauckman v. Leighton, 60 Mo. App. 38; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 145; Pierce v. Thomas, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 354; Condict v. Cowdrey, 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 66; Kramer v. Blair, 88 Va. 456.

Employer. — The term "employer" is used to designate one who has engaged the broker's services to perform any act within the scope of his occupation.

Principal. — The term "principal" is used in exactly the same sense. And this use is proper, because in the majority of cases the broker is given some powers as the agent of his employer.

Purchaser. — The term "purchaser" is used in this article somewhat broadly as denoting not only one who actually buys the property, but also one who considers the purchase thereof and enters into some negotiations therefor, though he does not actually complete the transaction. The use of the term in this broad sense has been found convenient, and will not in any case prove confusing.

Customer. — This term denotes one with whom the broker has entered into negotiations looking to the sale, exchange, or leasing of property or the making of a loan thereon, or whom he has sent to his employer for that purpose.

Sale. — In some instances, where it is not material to the question of law under discussion whether the particular transaction involved was a sale or an exchange of property, the term "sale" is, for the sake of brevity, used alone, even though one or more of the cases cited may relate to an exchange. The distinction between the two transactions is not, however, left unnoticed in any case where it is material.

III. LICENSE. — The business of a real-estate broker may properly be subjected to an occupation tax, or a license required for its exercise.¹

IV. EMPLOYMENT — 1. Who May Employ Broker — a. AGENT OF OWNER. — It has been held that an agent of the owner of lands, with power to sell the same, may employ a real-estate broker to assist in making a sale,² but on the other hand it has been asserted that an agency to sell does not include the power to bind the principal by the employment of a broker and a promise to pay him a commission,³ though, of course, it is otherwise where the owner has referred the broker to his agent, holding out that such agent is authorized to act for him in the matter of employing the broker.⁴

b. HUSBAND OF OWNER. — The husband of the owner of land may bind her by his act in employing a broker to assist in the sale thereof when she has authorized him to do so⁵ or ratified the employment,⁶ or when he has a general control of the land sufficient to authorize his act in employing the broker.⁷

c. ONE OF SEVERAL COPARTNERS. — A firm may be bound by the employment of a broker by one of its members, where none of the others disclaims or denies his joint liability.¹

2. What Amounts to Employment. — The mere leaving of a description of the property at the office of a broker by the owner or his agent, with a request that the broker sell it at a designated price and upon designated terms, amounts to an employment of the broker.²

Contract to Share Profits. — A contract between the owner of land and a broker, by which the broker is to sell the land and receive a share of the profits resulting from such sale, is one of agency merely and not of partnership.³

3. Whether Writing Necessary. — Whether or not the contract of employment of a broker must be in writing in order to be valid is a subject as to which no general rule can be laid down, as it is governed entirely by the statutes of different jurisdictions.⁴

V. AUTHORITY, POWERS, AND DUTIES — 1. General Rule — a. RULE STATED. — As a general rule the entire duty of a broker employed to assist in the sale of property is to find and introduce or report to his employer a person who is willing and able to purchase the property at the price and upon the terms which the employer has designated, and this is also the limit of his authority.⁵ Of course, though, his powers and duties in any specific case are also fixed by his contract of employment⁶ and the instructions which he has received from his employer.⁷

b. RATIFICATION OF UNAUTHORIZED ACTS. — A broker's unauthorized act in reference to the sale of property may, however, be ratified by the owner.⁸ The question as to whether or not there has been a ratification in a particular case must be determined in accordance with the settled principles of ratification, which have been discussed elsewhere in this work.⁹

2. Must Act in Good Faith and in Interest of Employer. — A real-estate broker employed to sell land must act in good faith and in the interest of his employer,¹⁰ but this rule cannot be extended so as to preclude his having the

In Missouri a written contract of employment is not necessary to entitle the broker to recover commissions, though for some purposes it is necessary. Gerhart v. Peck, 42 Mo. 10. Interest of Employer. — Page v. Voorhies, (Brooklyn City Ct. Gen. T.) 16 N. Y. Supp. 101; Stearns v. Hochbrunn, 24 Wash. 206.

Thus, where a broker who is employed to sell a piece of land at a certain price net to the owner, all over that which he can obtain to be his compensation, subsequently learns of facts considerably increasing the value of the land, it is his duty to inform the owner. Hegenland of others or even his own land for sale, provided he does not permit his interest in the sale of such lands to interfere with his duty to his employer.¹

3. Power to Sell. — The powers granted to a real-estate broker do not, as a rule, include the power to make a complete sale of his employer's property,² though this power may be delegated to him if the employer sees fit to do so.³

4. Power to Make Contract of Sale — a. GENERAL RULE. — It is not within the scope of the ordinary powers of a real-estate broker to make a contract of sale which shall be binding upon his employer;⁴ but the latter may, and frequently does, invest the broker with this power,⁵ and when this is done the contract made by the broker may undoubtedly be enforced against the owner.⁶

b. WHETHER AUTHORITY MUST BE IN WRITING. — In some jurisdictions a verbal grant of authority to make a contract of sale is held sufficient,⁷ while in others a writing is held indispensable.⁸

c. EFFECT OF GRANT OF POWER "TO SELL." — Some courts have taken the view that where a broker is employed "to sell" property power is given to make a binding contract of sale,⁹ but there is also considerable authority for the view that an employment "to sell" amounts to nothing more than an employment to find a purchaser and present him to the owner or conduct negotiations with him, and does not give the broker any authority to bind the owner by a contract to convey to a purchaser,¹⁰ as such authority

A Power to Sell Which Is Insufficient for Want of a Seal may authorize the agent to make a contract to convey which will bind his principal. Minor v. Willoughby, 3 Minn. 225; Jackson v. Badger, 35 Minn. 52.

10. Employment "to Sell" Does Not Give Power to Make Contract of Sale — California. — Armstrong v. Lowe, 76 Cal. 616.

must be given by express grant or result from necessary implication from words used, and the word "sell" is so commonly used in conversation and agreements between brokers and their employers in the restricted sense last referred to that its use, without more, should not be construed as giving the broker so large a power as to bind the owner by a contract.¹

d. AUTHORITY GIVEN MUST BE COMPLIED WITH. — Where power has been given a real-estate agent to make a contract of sale, he must act within the terms of his authority in order that his contract may be binding upon his employer.² Thus, where authority is given to make a contract for a sale of the property, he cannot bind his employer by a contract for the sale of an option to purchase it.³

e. BURDEN OF PROOF AS TO AGENT'S AUTHORITY. — One who seeks to enforce against the owner of land a contract of sale entered into by his agent must show that the agent had authority to enter into such a contract on behalf of his principal.⁴

f. RATIFICATION OF UNAUTHORIZED CONTRACT. — The unauthorized act of a broker in making a contract for the sale of his employer's land may be adopted and ratified by the latter, in which case the ratification will relate back to the time when the contract was made, and the contract will have the same binding effect as though it had been authorized when made.⁵

5. Right to Collect Proceeds of Sale. — Where a contract between the owner of property and a real-estate broker provided that the owner should apply the proceeds of sales to the payment of a debt which was a lien on the property, and that until sales were made the broker should make the revenues from the property sufficient to pay taxes, insurance, and interest on such debt, the broker had authority to collect the rents but not the proceeds of sale.⁶

6. Price. — The duty of the broker is to endeavor to effect a sale at the price set by his employer,⁷ and where the owner reduces the price but withdraws the reduction before the broker has made any effort to sell at the reduced price, the broker has no right subsequently to offer the property at such reduced price.⁸

7. Terms of Sale — a. BROKER MUST ADHERE TO TERMS FIXED BY EMPLOYER. — A broker employed or empowered to sell land must exact from the purchaser the terms and conditions of sale which his employer has fixed,⁹ and a sale or contract of sale made by the broker (he having the necessary authority) on any other terms cannot be enforced against the owner of the property.¹

b. WHEN TERMS OF SALE NOT EXPRESSED. — It has been held that an authority to an agent to sell land of his principal is, unless otherwise expressly provided, an authority to sell only for cash,² but on the other hand it has been held that in such case parol evidence is admissible to explain the contract,³ and the view has also been taken that under such circumstances the owner has a right to demand payment in cash, but until such demand is made the broker is required only to find a purchaser at the price fixed and on such terms as the owner may agree to.⁴

c. DISCRETION OF BROKER. — Where the sale was to be part cash and part credit, but the proportions were not expressed, it was held that this was left to the discretion of the broker.⁵

d. RATIFICATION OF SALE ON UNAUTHORIZED TERMS. — The act of the agent in making a sale on terms other than those upon which he was authorized to sell may be ratified by the owner of the property, and there is such a ratification when he in any manner expresses his assent. It is not necessary that the ratification should be in writing.⁶ But the principal cannot be held to a ratification unless he has had notice or knowledge of the unauthorized terms.⁷

8. Broker Not Required to Draw Contract. — A broker's duty does not require him to draw and attend to the execution of a contract between his employer and the customer whom he has produced.⁸

VI. TIME ALLOWED TO FIND PURCHASER, LENDER, ETC. — 1. Where Time Fixed by Contract. — Where the time which a broker is allowed to find a purchaser for the property, a person willing to make the required loan thereon, etc., is fixed by the contract between the broker and his employer, the broker must, of course, in order to be entitled to the benefits of the contract, fulfil his obligation within the time so limited.⁹

Where a Sale Is Made After the Time Limited, to a customer whom the broker has found, and with whom he has entered into negotiations before the expiration of such time, it has been held that the broker is entitled to his compensation;¹⁰

though it has been held otherwise where the sale was made a year after the termination of the broker's authority and at a price less than that for which he was authorized to sell.¹

2. Where No Time Fixed by Contract.—Where no time is fixed by the contract it cannot be inferred that the authority of the broker is to continue indefinitely,² but in such case he should be allowed a reasonable time within which to succeed in accomplishing what he was employed to do.³

3. Abandonment by Broker of Efforts to Sell.—Where a broker has negotiated with a certain person, or introduced him to the owner, but his efforts to sell to such person have proved unsuccessful and have been abandoned, he can claim no compensation for, or commission on, a sale made to such person some time afterwards as the result of independent negotiations with which he was in no way connected.⁴

4. Delay in Completing Sale.—A broker's right to his commission is not affected by the fact that after he has found a purchaser there has been a considerable delay in completing the sale, where a sale is finally made and there is a continuous connection between the steps taken, and the broker has all along been connected with the negotiations, etc.⁵

VII. RIGHTS OF BROKER AGAINST EMPLOYER.—Where real-estate brokers have received payments on account of property sold by them, and have paid over such amounts to their employer, the fact that the title to the property has failed does not create any liability on the part of the employer to the brokers, unless they have, at their employer's instance, refunded to the purchasers the amounts paid. And this is true even though the receipts for some payments have been assigned to them, for such assignment merely gives them the benefit of the contracts of purchase.⁶

VIII. LIABILITIES OF BROKER — 1. To Employer — a. FAILURE TO CARRY OUT CONTRACT TO SELL AT CERTAIN PRICE.—It has been held that a real-estate agent who fails to carry out an express contract to sell property at a certain price within a designated time, is liable to his employer in damages, the measure of which is the difference between the price at which he undertook to sell the property and its market value at the end of the time limited.⁷

b. PURCHASE MONEY NOT PAID OVER.—A real-estate broker who has collected purchase money and failed to pay over the same (less commissions) to his employer promptly is liable for the amount so retained⁸ with interest.⁹

c. EXPENSES IN SUIT FOR SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.—Where a real-estate broker, acting within his authority, enters into an agreement with a purchaser relative to the sale of land, which is not binding upon the owner as a contract of sale, the broker is not liable for the expenses incurred by the owner in a suit for specific performance by the purchaser.¹

d. INDUCING OTHER PARTY TO WITHDRAW FROM DEAL. — It has been held that when a contract for an exchange of properties which is the result of negotiations conducted by a broker, gives to the customer found by the broker the right to withdraw for any reason that he may see fit to act upon, the broker's employer cannot recover damages from the broker for having by fraudulent representations induced the other party to withdraw.²

e. FAILURE TO COLLECT RENTS, ETC. — An agent to rent lands and collect the rents is liable to his principal for neglect only when he has or with reasonable diligence could have collected rent, or could have rented the lands to some person who could or would have paid rent therefor.³

f. FAILURE TO PROPERLY CARE FOR PROPERTY — EVIDENCE. — In an action by the owner of property against a real-estate agent employed to take charge of the property and collect rents, for damages for allowing the water to remain in the pipes while the buildings were unoccupied, by reason of which the pipes burst and repairs became necessary, evidence is admissible that it is the custom of real estate agents having property for rent to look after it while it is unoccupied.⁴

g. EXCESS OF AUTHORITY — (1) Presumption of Acting Within Authority. — It has been held that where an agent appointed to hire, lease, and sell property, received Confederate money in payment therefor, it would be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that his principal authorized him to do so, and that he acted within the scope of his authority.⁵

(2) Measure of Damages for Excess of Authority. — Where an agent employed to sell property has exceeded his authority by taking a security for deferred payments, other than what he was authorized to take, the measure of his employer's damages is the difference in value between the security contracted for and that actually given.⁶

(3) Ratification. — Where an agent employed to sell has transcended his authority by selling on unauthorized terms, but the principal has received and retained the consideration taken from the purchaser, and does not offer to return it, the principal cannot, no fraud being charged, recover damages from the agent for his excess of authority.⁷

h. DECEPTION AS TO AMOUNT FOR WHICH PROPERTY SOLD. — If the broker understates to his employer the price which a purchaser is willing to pay or for which the property can be sold, and upon a sale being made obtains a larger amount, but conceals such fact and pays over to his employer only a portion of what he has received, or by any means whatever accomplishes the result of obtaining and converting to his own use a part of the purchase money, beyond his commission, the employer can recover the amount so retained or obtained and converted;⁸ and the same is true where a Wash. 206. See also Bassett v. Rogers, 162 Mass. 47.

In Kerfoot v. Hyman, 52 Ill. 512, a real-estate agent, who was authorized to sell property for a certain amount, sold a portion of it for a larger sum and placed the title to the remainder in a third person for his own benefit. It was held that he must account for the excess received for the portion sold and that the legal title to the remainder should be released to the principal.

Misconduct of Broker Must Clearly Appear. — See Henshaw v. Wilson, 46 Ill. App. 364.

broker employed to buy has by any device induced his employer to pay more than the property can be bought for and has converted the excess to his own use.¹

i. PURCHASE FOR HIMSELF AND RESALE AT PROFIT. — If a broker employed to sell real estate, without the knowledge of his employer, or through fraud or concealment, himself becomes the purchaser of the property, either directly or indirectly, and then resells the same at a profit, the employer is entitled to receive from the broker the profit so realized.² But in a case where a firm of brokers was employed to sell several lots and one member of the firm purchased one of the lots at auction, and the employer ratified the sale, executed a deed, and agreed that the price should be credited on the broker's fee, it was held that, no fraud being shown, the employer could not recover a profit made out of such lot.³

2. To Purchaser — a. RETURN OF DEPOSIT — (1) On Failure of Sale. — Where a real-estate agent, acting for a disclosed principal, has made a sale or entered into a contract for the sale of property, and has received a deposit on the sale, which he has paid over to his principal, he is not, on a subsequent failure of the sale, liable to the purchaser for the return of such deposit.⁴ And in one case the court has held this to be true regardless of whether or not the agent has actually paid over the deposit to his principal.⁵

Where There Is a Personal Undertaking on the part of the agent or broker to return the deposit in case the sale should fail, he is, of course, liable.⁶

(2) On Variance of Terms of Sale. — A real-estate agent who receives a part payment of purchase money on a sale conditioned that the offer be accepted by the owner on the terms and conditions specified, or the money be refunded, is not liable in an action by the purchaser for the money, if the offer is accepted by the owner, though at the time of acceptance the owner and purchaser, by mutual agreement, vary the terms and conditions upon which the agent sold.⁷

b. MISREPRESENTATION, CONCEALMENT, ETC. — It has been held that when a broker has represented to the purchaser that the price fixed by the owner, and the least he will accept for the property, is a larger amount than the price actually fixed by the owner, and has thereby induced the purchaser to pay a much larger amount and has converted such excess to his own use, the purchaser may recover such excess;⁸ but the purchaser has been denied any relief against the broker where the latter deceived him concerning a former transfer of the property, when the property was sold for the price demanded by the owner, and was worth the amount paid for it, and the broker was in the transaction the representative of the vendor and not the agent of the purchaser.⁹

c. FAILURE TO BIND PRINCIPAL. — A broker who enters into a contract of sale with a purchaser, which purports to bind his principal, but does not actually bind him, by reason of a lack of authority in the broker to make such a contract, is liable in damages to the purchaser upon the owner's refusal to carry out the contract, and the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the principal's title to the property and the price named in the contract of sale.¹

IX. RULE AGAINST ACTING FOR BOTH PARTIES — 1. Rule Stated. — The general rule is that a real-estate broker or agent who is negotiating a sale of property or otherwise acting in the usual line of his business cannot represent both parties to the transaction without their mutual knowledge and consent, and if he attempts to do so he forfeits all right to any compensation or commission from either.²

2. Limitations of the Rule. — The rule above stated does not apply where the broker was employed as a mere middleman to bring together the two parties in order that they might personally negotiate their own bargain without any interference, assistance, or participation by the broker in the negotiations,³ nor where both parties are cognizant of the double employment and consent thereto,⁴ and few cases seem to consider the rule to be that the broker is entitled to commissions from the party who knew of the double employment, though not from the other party.¹

X. RULES AGAINST BROKER ACTING FOR HIMSELF.—The general rule that an agent cannot be allowed to place himself in a position in which duty and interest conflict, or to make any profit out of his agency beyond his compensation as agent, applies in the case of a real-estate broker.² He cannot purchase the property which he was employed to sell, directly or indirectly, individually or together with others,³ nor become the vendor where he is employed to purchase property;⁴ neither can he purchase for himself property which he has undertaken to purchase for his employer.⁵ And where he has been employed to take charge of property he will not be allowed to acquire title thereto as against his employer.⁶

XI. COMPENSATION — 1. Right to — a. GENERAL RULE.—In order to Broker Cannot Sell to His Employee.—Powers v. Black, 159 Pa. St. 153. Compare Bogart v. McWilliams, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 31 S. W. Rep. 434.

After the Termination of the Agency agents have the same right as any other persons to deal in the property. Walker v. Derby, 5 Biss. (U. S.) 134; Oberlin College v. Blair, 45 W. Va. 812. See also Hawley v. Tesch, 88 Wis. 218.

The Purchase by the Agent Is Not Absolutely Void, but may be effectual and valid either by the express ratification of the principal with a knowledge of all the facts or by the principal's acquiescence for a great length of time with a like knowledge of the facts. Pridgen v. Adkins, 25 Tex. 388. See also Grant v. Hardy, 33 Wis. 668.

Ratification by Employer of Purchase by Broker.—Bassett v. Brown, 105 Mass. 551.

This Rule Does Not Apply where the broker has in good faith, and without any design to obtain the property for himself, sold to a purchaser, and afterwards purchased from such purchaser. Bookwalter v. Lansing, 23 Neb. 291. And where an agent employed to sell property on commission had also an option to purchase the property himself, and upon his finding a purchaser the owner refused to convey, and the agent was forced, in order to keep his engagement with the purchaser, to fall back on his option and take title himself and thus make himself the channel through which the title passed to the purchaser, there was nothing in these facts which prevented the agent from recovering his commissions to which he had become fully entitled when he procured a bona fide purchaser. Riemer v. Rice, 88 Wis. 16.

4. Kronenberger v. Fricke, 22 Ill. App. 550; Finch v. Conrade, 154 Pa. St. 326; Colbert v. Shepherd, 89 Va. 401.

5. Cannot Purchase for Himself.—Rose v. Hayden, 35 Kan. 106, 57 Am. Rep. 145; Matthews v. Light, 32 Me. 305.

This Has Been Denied in cases where the agreement to purchase for another rested in parol and no part of the consideration was paid by the principal, the court holding that in such case the principal cannot compel a conveyance to him. Burden v. Sheridan, 36 Iowa 125, 14 Am. Rep. 505; Dorsey v. Clarke, 4 Har. & J. (Md.) 551.

The Rule Does Not Apply where the broker has made all reasonable efforts to purchase the property for his employer at the price named as the most that he will pay, and after such efforts have failed has purchased the property for himself at a higher price. Pearsall v. Hirsh, 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. 410.

After the Termination of the Agency the agent may purchase the property for himself. Moore v. Stone, 40 Iowa 259.

3. Cannot Acquire Title Against Principal.—Bowman v. Officer, 53 Iowa 640; Krutz v. Fisher, 8 Kan. 90; McMahon v. McGraw, 26 Wis. 614; Fox v. Zimmermann, 77 Wis. 414; Geisinger v. Beyl, 80 Wis. 443. See also Janzen v. Williams, 36 Neb. 869.

person who does purchase, whereby the sale is perfected by the principal.¹

The Burden of Proof is on the broker to show that he was the procuring cause.²

A Question for the Jury. — Whether or not the broker was the procuring cause is a question of fact for the jury.³

Special Contract. — Where the contract between the broker and his employer prescribes certain conditions or contingencies which must be performed or must happen in order for the broker to be entitled to a commission, the contract of course governs.⁴

b. NECESSITY FOR EMPLOYMENT—(1) Rule Stated.—In order to entitle the broker to recover compensation for his services it is necessary that the person from whom he claims shall have employed him to render the services out of which his claim arises,⁵ or that there should have been such an acceptance and ratification of his services by such person as will in the eye of the law amount to the same thing as an original employment.⁶

The Time of Employment Is Immaterial when the broker was actually employed.¹

(2) Burden of Proof.—The burden of proving the existence of the employment is upon the person claiming compensation for his services.²

(3) Question for Jury.—Whether or not there was an employment of the broker who claims commissions is a question for the jury on conflicting evidence.³

c. NECESSITY FOR LICENSE.—In some jurisdictions it has been asserted that a broker doing business without a license required by statute or ordinance is not entitled to recover any compensation for his services,⁴ but in others the rule is that the broker's failure to procure a license will not deprive him of his right to commissions, where the loss of commissions is not one of the penalties provided for doing business without a license.⁵

Contract for Fixed Amount.—In Pennsylvania the rule is that a person who is not a licensed real-estate dealer has no right to recover commissions for the sale of real property unless he has a contract fixing a specific amount. If, however, there is such a contract the person employed to make the sale may recover upon it.⁶

d. NECESSITY FOR AGREEMENT TO PAY COMMISSIONS.—While a broker cannot recover for his services in the sale of property in the absence of any agreement on the part of the owner of the property to compensate him therefor,⁷ it is not necessary that such agreement be express, but it may be implied from the contract of employment⁸ or the acceptance of the broker's services

The law favors that construction of the contract and that interpretation of the circumstances and the conduct of the parties which will best secure to the broker the payment of

with knowledge that he expects to be paid therefor.¹

e. COMPENSATION DEPENDENT UPON SUCCESS. — As a general rule and in the absence of any contrary provision in his contract, the broker is entitled to be compensated for his efforts only in case they meet with success, unless the failure is attributable to the fault of his employer. It matters not how great have been his efforts nor how meritorious his services, if he is unsuccessful in accomplishing the object of his employment he is entitled to nothing.²

In Pennsylvania, however, it has been held that an agent employed to sell land may, upon his authority being revoked, recover on a quantum meruit for his services in attempting to sell.³

f. SERVICES NEED NOT BE BENEFICIAL. — It has been said that if a real-estate broker fully discharges his duty and performs all he undertakes to do he is entitled to compensation for his services whether or not they are in fact beneficial to his employer.⁴

g. KNOWLEDGE OF OWNER THAT CUSTOMER SENT BY BROKER. — Where the sale is made by the owner to a purchaser procured and sent to him by the broker, who is thus the procuring cause of the sale, it is not necessary, to entitle the broker to his compensation, that the owner should have known that the person to whom he sold was sent by the broker or that the latter had any connection with the sale.⁵

h. SALE THROUGH EFFORTS OF BROKER'S SUB-AGENT OR EMPLOYEE. — Where the sale results from the efforts of a sub-agent or employee of the broker, he has the same right to his commissions as though the sale had been the result of his own personal efforts,⁶ though it has been held otherwise where the sub-agent concealed from the owner the fact that he was acting for the broker.⁷

i. SALE DIRECTLY BY OWNER — (1) General Rule. — The owner of property who, desiring to dispose of it, employs a broker for that purpose, does not thereby relinquish the right to endeavor to sell it himself, and he may dispose of the property to a purchaser found by his independent efforts without any liability to the broker for commissions on, or compensation for, the his commissions. Duncan v. Borden, 13 Colo. App. 481.

When the Action Is Based upon an Express Promise, this must be shown in order to entitle the broker to recovery, as in such case no implied agreement is involved. Harrison v. Pustoska, 97 Iowa 166.

It Is a Question for the Jury whether the broker's services were intended to be rendered gratuitously or whether they were understood between the parties to be rendered for the usual compensation allowed to brokers on similar transactions. Darling v. Howe, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 14 N. Y. Supp. 561.

sale.¹ It is, however, essential that in so doing he should act in good faith, for he cannot be permitted to deprive the broker of his compensation by stepping in after the broker has found a person ready, willing, and able to purchase the property or to make a satisfactory exchange, and concluding the transaction directly with the broker's customer to the exclusion of the broker.²

(2) Contracts Varying the Rule. — In some cases the contract between the owner and the broker is such as to deprive the owner of the right stated in the preceding section to sell by his own efforts without liability to the broker.³ This is the case where the owner gives to the broker the exclusive and irrevocable right to sell for a specified time,⁴ or undertakes to pay a commission on all sales within a certain time no matter by whom made.⁵

general rule is that in order for a real-estate broker to be entitled to compensation or commissions he must have performed his full duty towards his employer and have accomplished all he undertook to do.¹ That is to say, he must, as a general rule, have found and produced a person who was ready, willing, and financially able to purchase, lease, or make an exchange for his employer's property at the price and upon the terms fixed by his employer, or to make a loan of the required amount for the time and upon the terms and security which his employer offers, or, in the case of an employment to purchase, he must secure the property for his employer at the price and upon the terms specified.² His duty having been fully performed, he then becomes

A Contract of Sale Must Be Made in order to entitle the broker to commissions, the signing of an agreement preliminary to such a contract is not sufficient. Walsh v. Gay, 49 N. Y. App. Div. 50.

Broker Not Entitled to Commission Where His Customer Unable to Complete Exchange.—Norman v. Reuther, (Supm. Ct. App. T.) 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 161.

Knowledge of Broker that His Customer Cannot Perform. — It has been held in Massachusetts that a broker is not entitled to a commission for an exchange where he brings to his employer a person who assumes to contract for an exchange of certain property as owner, but who is not the owner thereof, this fact being known to the broker but not to his employer, and such person being unable to perform his contract and irresponsible.¹

Where Broker Executes Contract. — Where the broker, as a part of his employment, assumes to execute for his principal an executory contract of sale or exchange, he does not become entitled to his commission unless the other contracting party is able to perform the contract on his part.²

(4) Burden of Proof. — The burden of proof is upon the broker claiming commissions to show all facts necessary to a full performance by him of his undertaking.³

(5) Acceptance of Services Performed as Compliance with Contract. — An acceptance by the employer of the services performed by the broker as a compliance with his contract entitles the broker to be compensated for such services, notwithstanding a departure from some of the conditions of the contract.⁴

k. CONSUMMATION OF SALE. — Where the contract is such that the right of the broker to compensation is made dependent upon the actual consummation of a sale or the payment of the entire purchase money, a fulfilment of those conditions is, of course, a prerequisite to his right to recover compensation.⁵ And it has also been held that the prevention of a sale by a contingency which was contemplated by the owner and the purchaser at the time the agreement for the sale was made will deprive the broker of his right to compensation.⁶

l. VARIATION OF TERMS OR PRICE — (1) Rule Stated. — Where a broker is the procuring cause of a sale which is actually consummated, he is entitled to his commissions notwithstanding the fact that the sale is made upon terms different from those upon which he was authorized to negotiate,⁷ or at a price lower than that at which the owner had authorized him to offer the property.¹ Nor is his right to commissions in such case affected by the fact that the sale, as finally made by the owner, includes property which the broker was not authorized to sell.²

(2) Special Contracts. — Where the contract provides that no commission shall be paid unless a purchaser is found at the price fixed, the contract governs and the broker must find a purchaser at such price in order to be entitled to his commission.³ So in a case where a commission was promised to the broker if he could purchase a particular house for his employer on certain terms, and the owner refused to sell on such terms, but the employer afterwards purchased directly from the owner on terms much less favorable to him, it was held that the broker was not entitled to any commissions.⁴

m. WHERE SALE DEFEATED BY ACT OF OWNER — (1) General Rule Stated. — Where the broker has fully performed his undertaking by producing a person who is ready, willing, and able to purchase or lease his employer's property at the price or rental and upon the terms stipulated for, or to make the required exchange, or to lend upon the desired terms, he is entitled to his commission, and his right is not defeated by the fact that his employer has failed or refused to consummate the transaction by making the proposed sale, lease, or exchange, or accepting the loan, or that the consummation of the transaction is otherwise prevented through the fault of his employer.⁵ This Imposition of New Conditions.—Where the broker's employer and the customer procured by him have agreed upon an exchange, the employer cannot defeat the broker's right to commissions by imposing new conditions when the agreement is reduced to writing, which conditions defeat the completion of the transaction. Halprin v. Schachne, (Supm. Ct. App. T.) 27 Misc. (N. Y.) 195, reversing (Supm. Ct. App. T.) 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 797, which affirmed (N. Y. City Ct. Gen. T.) 21 Misc. (N. Y.) 519.

Evidence that Broker Found Purchaser.—Boland v. Kistle, 92 Iowa 369.

An Agent Who Employs a Broker to Sell certain property is liable for commissions where the broker finds and produces a purchaser, even though it is then discovered that the property does not belong to his principal. Barthell v. Peter, 88 Wis. 316, 43 Am. St. Rep. 906.

Amount of Recovery.—Where the employer refuses to accept the loan, the broker can recover only the actual loss sustained. Hence a judgment for an amount agreed upon which was to cover lawyers' fees as well as brokerage is erroneous. Finck v. Menke, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 31 Misc. (N. Y.) 748, 64 N. Y. Supp. 38.

and sufficient reason,¹ and where the refusal is for an ostensible reason which if true would be sufficient to justify his action, the broker has the burden of disproving it in order to recover.²

(3) Where Name of Purchaser Not Disclosed. — Where the broker does not disclose the name of the purchaser the owner may refuse to sell without being liable for commissions, as he is entitled, in such case, to act upon the supposition that the broker himself is the proposed purchaser.³

(4) Refusal of Owner to Give Kind of Deed Demanded. — Where the owner refuses to give the kind of deed demanded by the purchaser, by reason of which the sale falls through, the right of the broker to recover commissions depends upon whether the owner was under any duty to give such a deed.⁴

(5) Where Broker Required to Submit Offers. — Where, by the agreement between the broker and his employer, no terms of sale or exchange are fixed, or the broker is required to submit any offer or propositions received by him to his employer for his acceptance or rejection, the broker is not entitled to any commissions until he has secured an offer which his employer accepts.⁵

n. RIGHT TO COMPENSATION A QUESTION FOR THE JURY. — Where, in an action by a real-estate broker for commissions, there is conflicting testimony as to the employment of the plaintiff, his instrumentality in bringing about a sale, and the value of his services, the case should be submitted to the jury.⁶

o. LOSS OF RIGHT TO COMMISSIONS. — (1) Fraud or Bad Faith. — A real-estate broker loses his right to commissions where, in his dealings in reference to the subject-matter of his employment, he is guilty of fraud or bad faith towards his employer,⁷ and it has been held that the broker's concealment

Failure to Inform Employer of Interest. — A broker who has an interest in the subject-matter of his employment antagonistic to that of his employer is not in a situation to perform his full duty to his employer, and a failure to inform the employer of the facts is a fraud which will defeat his right to a commission. Alvord v. Cook, 174 Mass. 120.

Commission Not Forfeited by Attempt to Persuade Owner to Reduce Price. — Gorman v. Hargis, 6 Okla. 360.

Where the Employer Is Not Injured by the conduct of the broker and no fraud or misconduct is alleged, the broker is entitled to his commission, though his conduct in some particulars is not commendable. So held in a case where the broker cautioned the purchaser whom he sent to the owner not to appear anxious to buy, but a sale was made to such from his employer of important and material facts, though without any fraudulent purpose, will defeat his right to a commission.¹

Broker Not Required to Misrepresent. — Good faith on the part of the broker does not, however, require him, in the interest of his employer, to make misrepresentations or to conceal the truth regarding the property, even though his statements may otherwise defeat a sale.²

(2) Failure or Refusal of Broker's Customer to Perform — (a) General Rule. — A broker is not, as a general rule, entitled to commissions where the customer procured by him fails or refuses to consummate the sale or exchange, or to make the loan which the broker was employed to negotiate.³

(b) Limitations of the Rule — aa. REFUSAL DUE TO DEFECTS IN TITLE. — The broker is not placed in any better position by the fact that his customer's ostensible reason for his refusal is an alleged cloud upon or defect in the title, when the title of the broker's employer is in fact good.⁴ But as a vendor always assumes an implied obligation to convey a good title, and a mortgagor impliedly agrees to give a good mortgage, the broker is entitled to his commission where his customer's refusal to complete the transaction is due to the fact that the employer's title is actually defective, for in such case the falling through of the sale or loan is attributable to the default of the broker's employer.⁵

Broker Must Prove Title Not Good. — Block v. Ryan, 4 App. Cas. (D. C.) 283; Brackenridge v. Claridge, 91 Tex. 527.

Where Commissions for a Loan Are to Be Deducted from the Amount Obtained, the broker is not entitled to commissions if the lender refuses to make the loan because of a defect in the title. Hess v. Eggers, (N. Y. City Ct. Gen. T.) 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 845, 76 N. Y. Supp. 980.

When the Broker Knows the State of His Employer's Title he is not entitled to a commission if a sale falls through by reason of defects therein.¹

Commission Dependent upon Obtaining a Certain Price. — In a case where the broker was employed to sell land at a certain price net to the owner, his commission being dependent upon a larger price being obtained by him, it was held that he was not entitled to compensation where a sale negotiated by him fell through by reason of his employer's lack of title.²

bb. REFUSAL DUE TO VENDOR'S INABILITY TO GIVE POSSESSION. — The broker is entitled to his commission where the refusal of the purchaser to complete is due to his employer's refusal or inability to give possession of the property within a reasonable time.³

cc. REFUSAL DUE TO PROPERTY NOT BEING AS REPRESENTED. — A broker is also entitled to his commission where he has a customer who is ready, willing, and able to buy or exchange, for his employer's property, but who refuses to consummate the transaction because of his discovery that the condition or situation of the property is not such as it has been represented to be by the broker's employer,⁴ though it has been held otherwise where there was only a slight misrepresentation as to the width of the property, which was due to a mere mistake, and the statement as to the width was not intended or understood as a warranty.⁵

(e) Returning Purchaser's Deposit. — Where the purchaser has made a deposit to be returned if the title does not prove good, the broker does not lose his right to his commission by returning such deposit without the knowledge of his employer, where the title has proved defective, or the employer has induced the purchaser to believe that it is defective and to act upon that belief.⁶

(3) Failure of Purchaser to Meet Deferred Payments. — If the purchaser produced by the broker is accepted by his employer and a sale is actually made, the right of the broker to his commission is not affected by the failure of the purchaser to meet deferred payments of the purchase money.⁷

(4) Objectionable Use of Property Sold. — The fact that a slaughter-house has been erected on the property sold does not deprive the broker of his right to commissions on the sale, where such use of the property does not violate the contract.⁸

(5) Effect of Failure to Disclose Name of Purchaser. — While the owner is entitled to know the name of the purchaser,⁹ and it has been asserted that so long as there is uncertainty as to the purchaser the broker cannot claim performance of a contract and demand his compensation,¹⁰ it has also been held that the failure of the broker to disclose the name of the purchaser is not such a breach of good faith as will deprive him of the right to commissions,¹ unless such information is material to the owner and might affect his action in the premises.²

(6) Agreement to Divide Commission with Purchaser.—A broker does not lose his right to his commission on a sale of property because he has agreed to divide the same with the purchaser, even though his employer does not know of this fact.³

(7) Agreement Between Brokers of Different Parties to Share Commissions.—It has been held that a broker is not deprived of his right to commissions from his principal for an exchange that he has negotiated, by reason of the fact that he and the broker for the other party to the exchange have agreed to share all commissions which they receive out of the transaction.⁴

(8) Sale on Sunday.—The fact that the agreement between the owner and a purchaser found by the broker relative to the sale of property was made on Sunday does not deprive the broker of his right to his commission.⁵

(9) Consent to Abandonment of Sale.—A broker has no right to commissions where the sale is abandoned with his consent.⁶

In the Case of Fiduciaries the rule applies to this extent: the fiduciary is personally liable for the broker's commissions when he has personally undertaken to pay them or when the broker is ignorant that his employer acts in a fiduciary capacity,¹ but not when he acts solely as a fiduciary without title to or interest in the property and this is known to the broker.²

b. LIABILITY OF PURCHASER. — Where a broker is employed by the owner of land to sell the same, the purchaser is not liable for the broker's commissions,³ unless he has agreed to conditions of sale which include the payment of the commissions by the purchaser,⁴ or has agreed with the broker to pay them.⁵

3. Amount of Compensation — a. AMOUNT FIXED BY CONTRACT. — When the amount of compensation which a broker is to receive for his services is definitely fixed by the contract between him and his employer, the contract, of course, governs,⁶ unless the sale actually made is clearly not such as is contemplated by the contract.⁷

b. REASONABLE VALUE OF SERVICES. — Where the amount to be paid to the broker is not definitely fixed by the contract between him and his employer, he is entitled to the reasonable value of his services, that is, such an amount as is usually charged by and paid to other real-estate brokers for like services.⁸

Failure of Sale. — Where the purchaser has agreed with the vendor "to pay all commissions or brokerage arising by reason of the sale of said property" and the sale falls through because of a defect in the vendor's title, the purchaser is not liable to the broker for commissions. Bab v. Hirschbein, (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 12 N. Y. Supp. 730. In this case it was further held, reversing 11 N. Y. Supp. 766, that where a recovery was sought by the broker on an oral agreement between himself and the purchaser by which the latter was to pay him a commission on the sale, the purchaser could introduce evidence to show that

Where the Person Claiming Compensation Is Not a Real Estate Agent by occupation, though he has in the particular instance performed services as such, evidence of the usual charges of real estate agents for such services is admissible. Hollis v. Weston, 156 Mass. 357;

c. PERCENTAGE OF PRICE OBTAINED — (1) In General.— The compensation of real-estate brokers for making a sale is in the majority of cases a certain percentage of the amount obtained, such percentage either being fixed by some express provision in the contract between the broker and his employer, in which case the contract of course governs,¹ or being the rate that is customary among real-estate brokers in the locality and that has become fixed by usage as the regular charge in the absence of any express agreement.²

(2) Basis of Computation.— Where the broker has negotiated an exchange, the basis of computation of his commission is the actual value of the property taken in exchange and not an inflated nominal value put upon it for any purpose,³ and in the case of a sale commissions should be allowed only on the amount which was the real consideration for the property sold.⁴ In the case of the negotiation of a lease, the broker's commission cannot be estimated with the value of the fee in the property as a basis,⁵ but in such case the broker is entitled to the agreed proportion of only the amount collected and properly credited to the rent account.⁶

d. CONTRACT TO ALLOW BROKER ALL OVER A CERTAIN AMOUNT.— Frequently property is placed with real-estate brokers for sale under an agreement that the owner is to receive a certain amount net for his property, and the broker is to have for his compensation whatever he can get for the property above that amount.⁷ In such case the contract

When Rate Agreed on Not Conclusive.— When a broker was employed to procure a loan of eight thousand dollars for a commission of four per cent., and he procured a person willing to make such loan, but the employer borrowed only two thousand dollars, it was held error to enter judgment for the broker for four per cent. of the amount actually borrowed without any finding as to the value of his services, as the rate agreed on for obtaining the eight thousand dollars was not necessarily the basis for determining the value of the services rendered. Diltz v. Spahr, (Ind. App. 1896) 42 N. E. Rep. 823.

Sale under Deed of Trust on Default of Purchaser.— Where the purchaser failed to meet deferred payments, and the property was put up for sale under a deed of trust, and bid in by the purchaser, but, under a guaranty which he had given, he actually paid a sum much larger than the amount of his bid, the broker was entitled to his stipulated commission on such larger sum, and not merely on the amount of the bid. Peters v. Anderson, (Va. 1895) 23 S. E. Rep. 754.

Employment to Sell for Certain Sum "Net."— Where the owner of property who has employed a broker to sell the same states that he will "take $7,500 net to me," this means merely that the property must bring to the owner at least $7,500 free of all expenses and deduction, and not that the broker shall be entitled to any amount which he may sell it for over $7,500. Turnley v. Michael, 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas., § 223.

The Finding of the Jury Is Conclusive as to whether under the contract the broker's commission was dependent upon the property's being sold for more than a fixed sum, where the evidence is conflicting. Rosenthal v. Drake, 82 Mo. App. 358.

Fraud on Purchaser.— Where the owner of land has agreed with a broker that if the latter will sell the land for eight thousand dollars governs,¹ and if the broker does not sell for more than the amount named, he is entitled to no compensation whatever.²

e. INTEREST. — Where the amount of a broker's commission is certain, or can be made certain by computation, he is entitled to interest thereon from the time it became due.³

4. Time for Payment of Commissions. — As has been seen, the right of the broker to his commissions becomes complete, and he is entitled to payment, as a general rule, when he has fully performed his undertaking with his employer.⁴ But the question sometimes arises whether he is entitled to immediate payment of his entire commission, when time is given the purchaser in which to pay a portion of the purchase money. Of course if this matter is provided for by the contract between the broker and his employer the contract governs, and the broker must, in order to recover his commissions, show that they have become due under the terms of the contract.⁵ It has

he will allow three thousand dollars as a commission, the owner cannot avoid liability to the broker on a sale actually made for eight thousand dollars on the ground that the broker in making the sale was guilty of fraudulent conduct and misrepresentation in inducing the purchaser to pay eight thousand dollars for the property when the owner was willing to take five thousand dollars. *Hardy v. How Excess Computed. — Where the defendant agreed with the plaintiff to allow him whatever the property brought over a certain amount, with the additional understanding that the plaintiff might secure and reserve for himself from the purchaser a windmill and tank upon the property, the defendant could not claim that the value of the windmill and tank should be credited on the surplus. Jenkins v. Darling, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 56 S. W. Rep. 931.

Amount of Recovery on Owner's Refusal to Sell. — In a case where brokers having property for sale under a contract of the character under discussion found a purchaser who was willing to pay three hundred dollars more than the price fixed, but the owner would not consummate the sale, it was held that the brokers could recover three hundred dollars, but could not in addition recover fifty dollars which they had paid the owner while negotiations were pending in order to induce him to complete the sale. Cornell v. Hanna, (Kan. 1898) 53 Pac. Rep. 790.

Indivisible Contract for Sale of Several Houses. — Where a broker was to have for his services in selling four houses one-third of all over forty-four thousand dollars realized from the sale, he was not entitled, upon a sale of one house only, to one-third of the excess over eleven thousand dollars. Mayer v. Haaren, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Gen. T.) 5 N. Y. Supp. 436.

Construction of Contract. — Where commissions on a purchase of land for several persons jointly were to be paid when the land was resold, or if sold in parcels a proportionate part of the commission was to be paid as each parcel was sold, the broker did not become entitled to any payment upon a sale by one of the joint owners of his undivided interest in the whole property. Johnson v. Sirret, 153 N. Y. 51, reversing 83 Hun (N. Y.) 317.

Where Commissions are Payable Out of Instalments of purchase-money the broker, in order to recover, must show that the instalments have been paid or that the fault of the employer has prevented their collection. Burnett v. Edling, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 711.

Contract for Payment in Instalments — Foreclosure of Deed of Trust. — When the vendor has agreed to pay the broker his commissions proportionately as instalments of purchase money are paid, and after default by the purchaser the vendor forecloses a deed of trust securing the deferred payments and bids in the property for the amount due him with interest, costs, etc., the broker is entitled to be paid the balance of his commissions at once. Crane v. Eddy, 93 Ill. App. 569, affirmed 191 Ill. 645.

Commission to Be Paid When Final Purchase Money Paid. — Where the understanding between the broker and the vendor, his employer, was that the full commission should not be paid until the final purchase money was paid in, and the purchaser failed to complete the contract, and thereby, according to the contract of sale, forfeited the amount he had paid also been said that the only fair and equitable rule where the purchase money is payable in instalments is to allow commissions on the instalments as paid from time to time;¹ but on the other hand it has been held that it does not necessarily follow, from the fact that a broker has consented to receiving in lieu of the customary percentage for his services an amount which his customer stands ready and willing to pay on the owner's net price, that payment of this sum to the broker depends upon or is to be deferred until final and complete satisfaction of the purchaser's obligation to the owner.²

5. Employment of Several Brokers — a. RIGHT OF OWNER. — An owner of property desiring to sell the same may employ several different brokers for that purpose, if he so desires.³

b. WHO ENTITLED TO COMMISSIONS. — In such case the broker through whose instrumentality the purchaser is procured — who is the procuring cause of the sale — is entitled to the entire commission to the exclusion of all others,⁴ and the owner cannot defeat his right by actually making the sale through another broker.⁵ Nor can the agent who has first found a purchaser be deprived of his right to a commission by the fact that the property is sold through another broker to a different purchaser.⁶

Merely Calling the Purchaser's Attention to the Property is not sufficient to entitle the broker to commissions if another broker was the efficient and procuring cause of the sale.¹

Where Two or More Brokers Have Each Found a Purchaser, the owner is bound to pay a commission only to the one who has first found and introduced a purchaser to whom the sale is made; the other brokers are entitled to nothing.²

Special Contracts. — Where the owner of property has agreed to pay a broker a certain commission if he effects a sale, and one-half that commission if any other broker makes a sale, naming the lowest price at which he will sell, the broker is not entitled to a commission on a sale made through another broker for a less amount.³

6. Right to Recover in Cash. — When a broker who is entitled to a cash commission has consented to take real estate, he may upon his employer's refusal to convey recover his commission in cash,⁴ but he cannot, after having agreed that his commission should be paid by a conveyance to him of certain land, refuse a deed which is tendered to him, and recover his commission in cash.⁵

7. Assignment of Claim for Commissions. — A claim for commissions on a sale of real estate may be assigned, even during the pendency of an action to recover such commissions.⁶

8. Lien for Commissions. — While a real-estate broker does not usually possess the right of a general lien for his commission,⁷ and it has been held that such a broker has no lien on moneys or papers placed in his hands to use in the purchase of land,⁸ a broker has been held to have a lien on the specific deed delivered to him by his principal,⁹ and it has also been asserted that a broker who is employed to procure a loan has a lien for his commissions and may deduct them out of the amount procured.¹⁰

9. Reimbursement for Expenses. — As a general rule a broker is not entitled to be reimbursed for the expenses he has incurred in endeavoring to make a sale,¹¹ though a recovery has been allowed of the amount paid for an abstract of title necessarily procured for the benefit of his employer.¹²

In Pennsylvania it has been held that if a real-estate broker has incurred expenses in connection with his employment prior to a revocation of his authority, he may recover such expenses.¹³

10. Limitation of Actions. — The statute of limitations begins to run against a broker's claim for commissions at the time an actual and bona fide sale is made, notwithstanding there has been a previous nominal sale for the purpose of showing briskness in sales.¹⁴

XII. AGREEMENT BETWEEN BROKERS TO SHARE COMMISSIONS — 1. Not a Partnership. — An agreement between real-estate brokers to share the commissions received for the sale of certain property does not constitute them partners.¹⁵

2. Whether Writing Necessary. — A contract between brokers to share the commissions realized on a sale or sales of realty is not required to be in writing.¹

3. Rights Arising Out of Agreement. — Where the broker having charge of the sale of property has employed another broker to assist him in the sale for a certain proportion of the commission, if successful, the latter is entitled to his agreed commission if his efforts are the procuring cause of the sale,² and can recover the specified proportion of the whole commission which the first broker has received, regardless of any other agreement of such broker regarding the commissions, which is unknown to him.³

Where the Original Time for Sale Has Expired, but the sale is made before the expiration of an extension thereof, through the efforts of the parties to the agreement to divide commissions, there must be a division according to the agreement.⁴

Commissions Must Have Been Received. — In order to entitle a broker to recover from another broker on an agreement of the latter to divide with him the commission on the sale of certain property, the commission must have been actually received by the broker whom it is sought to charge with liability.⁵ Hence, where the commission is payable in proportion as the purchase money is received by the vendor, a judgment should not be entered against the broker to whom the commission is payable for the other broker's share of the entire commission, where all of the purchase money has not been paid at the time of such judgment, and consequently all of the commission has not been received.⁶

Rights as Against Employer. — The broker who was directly employed is entitled to recover the whole commission from his employer, and the only remedy of the broker who was employed to assist in the sale is against the first broker, who is his employer.⁷

Where the Brokers for Both Parties to an Exchange Have Agreed to Divide their commissions, and one broker has collected the commissions from both principals, the other broker may recover his share of the commissions from the broker who received them.⁸

XIII. REVOCATION OF AUTHORITY — 1. Right to Revoke — a. GENERAL RULE. — Where the contract of employment specifies no time during which the broker's authority to sell or to negotiate for a sale shall continue, the authority is subject to revocation at any time before a sale is made, or a purchaser found who is ready, willing, and able to purchase on the required terms, without liability on the part of the owner to the broker.⁹ If, however,

Violation of Instructions, Waiver. — In Russell v. Andrac, 84 Wis. 374, 79 Wis. 108, the defendant, who was the agent for the sale of certain land at a certain price, employed the plaintiff to find a purchaser under an agreement to pay him a share of the commission, and the plaintiff employed one M. to assist him. Certain persons applied to M. to purchase the property and he gave them a price larger than that which the owner had fixed, but such persons subsequently purchased the property from the owner at the price originally fixed and the owner paid the agreed commission to the defendant on the sale. It was held that by paying the stipulated commission the owner waived the violation of his instructions and such waiver estopped the defendant from asserting such violation of instructions as a defense to an action by the plaintiff for his share of the commission, and would also estop the plaintiff, after receiving his commission, from asserting it in an action brought by M. to recover his stipulated share of the plaintiff's commission.

his authority is revoked after he has found a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase on the required terms, he is entitled to his commission, though the sale be not made through him.¹

b. PARTICULAR CONTRACTS VARYING THE RULE.—Where the contract between the broker and his employer provides that the broker shall be entitled to compensation if the property is withdrawn from sale within the time limited in the contract, the broker is, of course, entitled to the stipulated compensation upon such withdrawal.²

A Contract Giving the Broker the Exclusive Right to Negotiate a Sale of the property for a limited time has been held to exclude the right of the owner to revoke the broker's authority within the time limited.³

Where the Broker's Authority Is Coupled with an Interest, it is not revocable at the pleasure of the owner of the property.⁴

2. Notice.—The broker is entitled to notice of the revocation of his authority,⁵ and is entitled to commissions on a sale made before receiving such notice.⁶

3. Burden of Proof.—Where, in an action for commissions, the employer resists the broker's claim on the ground that his authority was revoked prior to the sale, the burden of proving such revocation is upon the employer.⁷

REAL PARTY IN INTEREST. (See also the title PARTIES TO ACTIONS, 15 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 476, 710.) — "In statutes requiring suits to be brought in the name of the 'real party in interest,' this term means the person who is actually and substantially interested in the subject-matter, as distinguished from one who has only a nominal, formal, or technical interest in it or connection with it." 2

Y.) 132, where land was sold for a specified sum with a condition that if the vendee should resell it for a certain other specified amount and realize the price, then five hundred dollars more should be paid to the vendor, it was held that the vendor acquired no right to the additional compensation except in the event of an actual sale and realization of the proceeds; that an offer of the required amount made to the vendee by a responsible party, and refused, was not enough. The court said: "To realize means to bring into actual possession; it is ordinarily used in contrast to hope or anticipation."

An article of association of a building and investment society provided that "no dividend shall be payable except out of the realized profits arising from the business of the company." Upon the interpretation of the word realized, as here used, the court, per Kay, J., said: "Realized must there have its ordinary commercial meaning, which, if not equivalent to 'reduced to actual cash in hand,' must at least be 'rendered tangible for the purpose of division.' The article is in a negative form. It is a prohibition against payment, and against the payment of dividends except out of realized profits arising from the business of the company. The precise thing intended to be prohibited is the payment of dividends in respect of 'estimated' profits as distinguished from realized. The meaning of the word in this article is the direct converse of the word 'estimated.'" In re Oxford Ben. Bldg., etc., Soc., 35 Ch. D. 510, 17 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 179.

Executory Contract. — Where the plaintiff was to be paid "out of the first moneys and government scrip there is realized" by the defendant from the sale of certain lands, it was held that an executory contract for the sale of such lands did not make the defendant liable upon his contract. Stanford v. Greene County, 18 Iowa 218.

Indebtedness. — The payee of a draft assigned it to one who gave his promissory note, the payee agreeing to release the assignee from paying the note in case he should be unable to "collect or realize" on the draft. The assignee afterwards became indebted to the drawer. It was held that until a suit should be brought by the drawer enabling the assignee to set off the draft against the debt, it could not be predicated that the assignee had been able to realize on the draft by means of the indebtedness. Hall v. Henderson, 84 Ill. 611.

1. Realm. — In Reg. v. Keyn, 2 Ex. D. 197, it was said: "I cannot help thinking that some confusion arises from the term realm being used in more than one sense. I. DEFINITIONS. — Real Property in its strict legal sense denotes the right or interest which one may have in things real.¹

Things Real are such as can be comprehended under the term "lands, tenements, and hereditaments,"² being such things as on the death intestate of the owner of the fee pass to his heirs at law, in contradistinction to things personal, which pass to his personal representatives.³

II. TENURE BY WHICH THINGS REAL ARE HOLDEN — 1. In England — a. ORIGIN AND HISTORY OF TENURE. — The fundamental maxim of the English law of real property is "that the king is the universal lord and original proprietor of all the lands in his kingdom and that no man doth or can possess any part of it but what has mediately or immediately been derived as a gift from him,

1. Real Property Defined. — It is in this sense that Blackstone uses the term when he speaks of things not as property but as the objects of property. 2 Bl. Com. 15. See the title PROPERTY, ante, p. 259.

2. The Term "Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments" is a series of names of which each succeeding one is broader than the preceding; yet the last is not inclusive even of the first. See generally Challis on Real Prop. 36; 2 Bl. Com. 17; Washb. on Real Prop. *2, and the definitions of these several terms in this work.

The Term "Real Property" is coextensive with "lands, tenements, and hereditaments." La Crosse v. Cameron, (C. C. A.) 80 Fed. Rep. 273; Porter v. Williams, 9 N. Y. 148, 59 Am. Dec. 519; Rogers v. Kimsey, 101 N. Car. 564; State v. South Penn Oil Co., 42 W. Va. 80; Van Camp v. Peerenboom, 14 Wis. 65.

The Words "Real Property" include lands, tenements, and hereditaments and all rights thereto, and interest therein, equitable as well as legal. Burton v. Hintrager, 18 Iowa 351; Scarborough v. Smith, 18 Kan. 409; Lewis v. Glass, 92 Tenn. 147.

to be held upon feudal services." ¹ This maxim embodies the essential principle of the feudal system, without some general acquaintance with which an accurate comprehension of the laws which regulate real property is impossible.

Feudal System. — The feudal system is generally regarded as having arisen gradually in the countries once a part of the Roman Empire, out of the interaction of the remains of Roman law and the primitive customs of the Teutonic tribes which settled in those countries.² At its root lies the need of mutual co-operation for the defense of society in a period of wild lawlessness.³ Later legal systematists, who were acquainted with it in its developed form, conceived of it as a set of rules consciously devised to serve certain purposes and adopted or forced upon the communities in which it prevailed.⁴ In very general terms the developed feudalism which lies at the basis of the English land laws may be thus described:⁵ The ultimate title to all land resided in the king, who was charged with the defense of the whole state. One step below him were the great nobles, the king's tenants in capite, among whom the land was divided in large districts, which were held on a basis of military service or military exactions. This estate of a tenant in capite was subdivided among his subordinates into smaller districts, and their estates might be again and again subdivided in the same way until the tenant paravail, terre-tenant, or actual cultivator of the soil was reached. Thus the land was divided among a regularly graded body of owners from the lord paramount through the mesne lords to the terre-tenant. A feudal holding, known as fief, fee, or feud ⁶ (in contradistinction to allodial lands),⁷ created the relation of lord and tenant, who were bound to one another by mutual obligations, the lord being bound to protect his tenant, the tenant to render services and feudal dues to his lord.

b. VARIOUS KINDS OF TENURE — (1) In General. — The kinds of tenure or modes in which lands in England have been held since the conquest may be divided, according to the nature of the service or return due by the tenant to his lord, into four general species, being in respect to the quality of such service either free or base, and in respect to its quantity and time of performance either certain or uncertain.⁸

(2) Tenure in Chivalry. — The first, and formerly the most general, species of tenure was that by knight-service or tenancy in chivalry. This was the tenure by which a knight's fee was held,⁹ and it was esteemed the most honorable because of the nature of the service to be rendered by the tenant, which consisted in attending his lord to the wars for forty days in every year when called upon,¹⁰ but its incidents also made it the most oppressive.¹¹

8. Tenures Divided According to Nature of the Services. — 1 Crabb's Law Real Prop. 738.

Free services were such as were not unbecoming a freeman to perform; base services were those of a menial and servile nature; certain services, whether free or base, were such as were reduced to a certainty both as to their quantity and the time of their performance; uncertain services were such as depended upon unknown contingencies in both these respects. 2 Bl. Com. 60.

10. Knight-Service. — 2 Co. Litt., c. 3, § 95. See 2 Poll. & M. Hist. Eng. Law (2d ed.) 254.

11. Incidents of Tenure in Chivalry. — These incidents as enumerated by Blackstone are seven in number, viz., aids (to the ransom of the lord's person, the knighting of his son, and the marriage portion of his daughter); reliefs and primer seisin (payable by the heir on succeeding to the estate); wardship (see title GUARDIAN AND WARD, vol. 15, p. 21); marriage (the disposition of infant wards in marriage); fines for alienation and escheat (see the title ESCHEAT, vol. 11, p. 315). 2 Bl. Com. 63.

Military tenures (having been discontinued during the period of the commonwealth) were finally swept away by the statute 12 Car. II., c. 24, which abolished all forms of military tenure except tenure by the honorary service of grand serjeanty,¹ and converted them all into tenure by free and common socage.

(3) Tenure in Free Socage. — The second species of tenure to which the military tenures were reduced consists in holding land by any free and honorable but certain and determinate service,² and subsists in England to this day as the one general form of tenure by which, with the single exception before noted, all frank tenements in lay hands are held.

(4) Copyhold Tenure. — Copyhold tenure, or tenure by copy of court roll, is the mode in which lands in a manor are held, and is of ancient though humble origin, copyholders, it is said, being no other than villeins who, by a long series of immemorial encroachments upon their lord, have at last established a right to those lands which they before held merely at his pleasure and upon the basest and most uncertain services.³ It derives its name from the fact that copies of the rolls of the manor court are the only evidence of the tenure.⁴

(5) Tenure in Ancient Demesne. — The fourth and last species of lay tenure is that of tenure in ancient demesne, which is a sort of copyhold tenure by which lands are held in manors which are, or once were, the property of the crown.⁵

(6) Tenure in Frankalmoign. — Tenure in frankalmoign, or free alms, is the tenure by which almost all of the ancient monasteries and religious houses held their lands, and by which the parochial clergy and many ecclesiastical and eleemosynary foundations hold them in England to this day. It has none of the incidents of the feudal tenures, but is recompensed by services merely spiritual, and hence cannot subsist in lay hands.⁶

2. In Canada. — The tenure by which land is held in the Dominion of Canada varies in the different provinces. In Ontario, the mode is largely regulated by the imperial statute 31 Geo. III., c. 31, § 43, which provided that all lands which should be thereafter granted within the province of Upper Canada should be granted in free and common socage in like manner as lands

1. Grand Serjeanty is a species of tenure derived immediately from the crown, and is distinguished by the nature of the service to be performed by the tenant, which is always of an honorable and dignified kind closely connected with the person or the service of the king, such as to carry his sword or spurs at his coronation, to keep guard over one of the royal castles, or to perform some other useful or honorable office. 2 Co. Litt., c. 8, § 53; Challis on Real Prop. 8.

Cornage Tenure was a species of grand serjeanty, and is so denominated from the nature of the service, which consisted in winding a horn when the Scots or other enemies crossed the border. 2 Co. Litt., c. 8, § 156; 2 Bl. Com. 74.

Petit Serjeanty is also a form of tenure which can be of none but the crown, and though it is military inasmuch as the service always consists in rendering some small instrument of war, yet, from the fact that the service is certain both in respect to the character of the implement and the time when it is rendered, petit serjeanty is classed as a form of socage tenure. 2 Co. Litt., c. 9, § 159; 2 Bl. Com. 81; 1 Crabb's Law Real Prop. 748.

2. Tenure in Free Socage. — 2 Co. Litt., c. 5, § 117.

Burgage Tenure is a species of Town Socage. — See BURGAGE TENURE, vol. 5, p. 43.

Tenure in Gavelkind is a species of socage tenure existing principally in Kent, but occasionally met with in other parts of the kingdom. Land so held was distinguished principally by four characteristics: it was alienable by the tenant at the age of fifteen, was devisable by will before the passage of the statute, was not forfeited by felony, and descended to all the sons of the tenant alike. 2 Bl. Com. 84.

3. Origin of Copyhold Tenure. 2 Bl. Com. 95. See also COPYHOLD, vol. 7, p. 507.

5. Tenure in Ancient Demesne. — 2 Bl. Com. 99.

6. Tenure in Frankalmoign. — 2 Co. Litt., c. 6; Challis on Real Prop. 9.

This seems to be an old Saxon tenure which escaped the Norman revolution, through the reverence paid to religious men. No fealty was due to the lord, and his only redress, if the service was not performed, was to complain to the ordinary or visitor. This service originally consisted in praying for the souls of the donor and his heirs, but the character of it was somewhat altered by the Reformation. 2 Bl. Com. 101.

were then holden in free and common socage in England.¹ In Quebec, lands were formerly held by a seigniorial tenure of French feudal origin, but this tenure was abolished by the Seigniorial Act of 1854 and its amendments, which provided for the payment of an indemnity by the government to the seigniorial proprietors for the extinction of their rights.²

3. In the United States. — In the United States, although the nomenclature of feudal tenure has been retained, and although land is sometimes said to be held in free and common socage, yet all the incidents of feudal tenure have been abolished and land is everywhere in effect,³ and in some states has been expressly declared by the constitution or statutes to be,⁴ allodial. Escheat, which was originally an incident of the feudal relation, does, in fact, remain, but it exists as an incident of sovereignty and not of tenure,⁵ and the right of eminent domain, which is inherent in the state, is exercised, not by virtue of an ultimate ownership of the soil, but as an incident of police power.⁶ So, the oath of allegiance, which has superseded the oath of fealty, is merely the acknowledgment of a political obligation due from all citizens to the state, and has no relation whatever to the ownership of land.⁷

III. CHARACTER OF PROPERTY WHICH MAY SUBSIST IN THINGS REAL. — The character of property which may subsist in things real — signified by the word "estate" — may, in respect to the jurisdiction in which it is cognizable, be either legal or equitable.

A Legal Estate is such an interest in things real as is cognizable in, and will be protected by, a court of law.⁸

An Equitable Estate is a right to the beneficial enjoyment of a thing, the legal title of which is in another. It is termed equitable because it is not recognized at law, but is enforceable in a court of equity only. It arises from the decomposition of the estate into its constituent elements by means of a trust, either expressly created in the instrument by which the legal estate is vested⁹ or raised by implication of law from the circumstances of the transfer.¹⁰

IV. TITLE, AND THE MODE OF ACQUIRING AND LOSING IT — 1. Title Defined. — Title has been defined as "the means whereby the owner of lands hath the just possession of his property,"¹¹ and is said in the older books to consist of three several stages or degrees, the union of which in one person is necessary to create in him a complete title. These several stages or degrees of title are distinguished as the mere possession, the right of possession, and the right of property.¹² Whatever merit this distinction may have had in the days of real actions passed away with their abolition and need not as a practical question concern us now.

2. Mode of Acquiring and Losing — a. IN GENERAL. — The various modes by which title to real property may be lost and acquired may be reduced to two general classes, viz., title by descent and title by purchase.¹

b. TITLE BY DESCENT. — Descent, or hereditary succession, is the title whereby a man, on the death of his ancestor, acquires his estate by right of representation as his heir at law. It is a title acquired solely by operation of law, the estate of the ancestor being cast upon the heir without his consent and even against his expressed disclaimer.²

c. TITLE BY PURCHASE — (1) In General. — Every other mode of acquiring title is denominated a purchase. This has been defined as a title "which a man hath by his own act or agreement."³ It may arise either by act of the parties or by operation of law, but it cannot vest in a person unless he expressly or impliedly assents to it.⁴

(2) Original and Derivative Titles. — A title by purchase may be either original or derivative. An original title is one acquired solely by the act of him who claims it; a derivative title is one acquired by transfer from a former owner.⁵

(3) Occupancy. — A title by occupancy is acquired by taking possession of a thing which before belonged to no one.⁶ It is a familiar mode of acquiring property in things personal,⁷ but is not predicable of things real, for in contemplation of law land can never be without an owner.⁸

Common Occupancy — Estates Per Autre Vie. — To this fundamental principle, however, there was at common law a single exception. If a man had an estate granted to him for the life of another and died during the life of the cestui que vie, he who first entered on the land might retain the possession so long as the cestui que vie lived, for the reason that there was no one who could lawfully dispute the possession.⁹ Common occupancy has been abolished both in *England*¹⁰ and the *United States*¹¹ by statute.

(4) Adverse Possession. — A title to land by adverse possession is acquired

11. Statutes in the United States. — In Rhode Island the statute (Gen. L. 1896, c. 203, § 28), extends the power to dispose of property by will to estates per autre vie.

In North Carolina the statute declares (Code of N. Car., vol. 1, c. 28, r. 11), that every estate for the life of another not devised shall be deemed an inheritance of the deceased owner.

In New Jersey (Gen. Stat., vol. 3, p. 3757), estates per autre vie not devised go to the executors or administrators of the party who had the estate thereof by virtue of the grant, and are assets in their hands and are applied and distributed in the same manner as the personal estate of the testator or intestate.

In some other states the statutes declare that an estate per autre vie, whether limited to his heirs or otherwise, shall be deemed a freehold only during the life of the grantee or devisee, and after his death shall be regarded as a chattel real. by an actual, notorious, exclusive, and continuous possession of it under a claim of right, and adversely to the title of the true owner for the period prescribed by the statute of limitations. The facts necessary to constitute these elements are treated elsewhere in this work.¹

(5) Prescription. — Prescription is the mode of acquiring title to property by immemorial or long-continued possession, use, and enjoyment. It is applicable to incorporeal rights in the same way that adverse possession creates a title to land. The requisites of this mode of acquiring title are discussed elsewhere in this work.²

(6) Escheat. — In its original signification, escheat was an incident of feudal tenure, by virtue of which the lord of the fee succeeded to the estate on the death of his tenant without lawful heirs. It was, therefore, not strictly a mode of acquiring title, but was rather the coming into possession of an interest which already existed in expectancy. In the United States, however, where estates are essentially allodial, and where the state succeeds to the title, not by virtue of any proprietary right, but in its capacity as sovereign, escheat may properly be regarded as an original mode of acquiring title, being a sort of occupancy, or the taking possession of that which belonged to no one.³

(7) Forfeiture. — Forfeiture as a means of acquiring title to land was formerly an incident of sovereignty by which, on conviction of certain high crimes and misdemeanors, the crown or state succeeded to the estate which the offender forfeited by his misconduct.⁴ This mode of acquisition, having been almost universally abrogated by statute in the United States,⁵ requires no discussion.

(8) Estoppel. — The rule is well settled that if a grantor makes a conveyance of land to which he has a defective title, or no title whatever, by deed which contains any of the usual covenants, or which sets forth by averment or recital, either in express terms or by necessary implication, that the grantor is seized or possessed of a particular estate in the premises, which estate the deed purports to convey, he, and all persons in privity with him, will be estopped from ever afterwards denying that he was seized and possessed of such title at the time, or from setting up an after-acquired title against his grantee, or any one holding under or in privity with him. Whether the estoppel has the effect of actually passing such after-acquired title to the grantee, or whether it merely precludes the grantor from asserting such title in derogation of his own grant, is a disputed question which has been adequately discussed elsewhere in this work.⁶

(9) Bankruptcy. — Under the National Bankruptcy Act of 1898, a trustee in bankruptcy, upon his appointment and qualification, becomes vested by operation of law with title to all the property of the bankrupt⁷ owned by him at the time of the filing of the petition⁸ not exempt from the claims of creditors.⁹ This title takes effect by virtue of the act from the date of the adjudication,¹ and is subject to all equitable and valid liens existing against the property on that date,² but is not subject to the lien of a judgment entered against the bankrupt after the adjudication and before the appointment of the trustee.³ Upon the confirmation of a composition offered by a bankrupt, the title to his property reverts in him.⁴

(10) Receivership. — The appointment of a receiver by a court of equity does not vest in him any title to the property given into his charge; but the court may, if occasion require, compel the person over whose property the receiver is appointed, to execute a formal conveyance to him.⁵ In some of the states, however, the legal effect of the appointment of a receiver in proceedings supplementary to execution is to vest the receiver with the property of the judgment debtor from the time of the filing of the orders, and a legal assignment is therefore unnecessary.⁶

(11) Abandonment. — The rule has been broadly stated that every owner of property, whether real or personal, may abandon it.⁷ As regards personalty this rule is unquestionably sound;⁸ but in respect to realty the decisions do not justify so broad a statement. It is not disputed that easements and other incorporeal hereditaments may be lost by abandonment,⁹ or that incipient rights to land, such as may arise from location and survey, or other merely equitable titles, not perfected into a grant, or vested by deed, may be abandoned.¹⁰ But that a perfect legal title may be so lost cannot be supported. Under the Spanish law, as it existed in territory now a part of the United States, abandonment was a recognized mode of parting with title to land,¹¹ but except in Texas, where the survival of this principle seems to have unsettled the question,¹² the decisions are unanimous in asserting that under

Abandonment of Adverse Holding. — Although one holds another's land adversely for seven years under color of title and claim of right, yet if he then abandons the land he cannot claim the benefit of the statute of limitations. Vickery v. Benson, 26 Ga. 582. See also Com. v. Dudley, 10 Mass. 403.

No doubt a disseisor may abandon the land or surrender his possession by parol to the disseisee at any time before his disseisin has ripened into a title, and thus put an end to his claim. His declarations are admissible in evidence to show the character of his seisin, whether he holds adversely or in subordination to the legal title. But the title, obtained by a disseisin so long continued as to take away the right of entry, and bar an action for the land by limitation, cannot be conveyed by parol abandonment or relinquishment; it must be transferred by deed. One having such title may go out of possession, declaring that he abandons it to the former owner, and intending never again to make any claim to the land, and so may the person who holds an undisputed title by deed; but the law does not preclude them from reclaiming what they have abandoned in a manner not legally binding on them. A parol conveyance of land creates nothing more than an estate or lease at will. School Dist. No. 4 v. Benson, 31 Me. 381, 52 Am. Dec. 618.

12. Texas Doctrine. — Dikes v. Miller, 24 Tex. 417, where Wheeler, C. J., delivering the opinion of the court, says: "If a person having the disposing power absolutely, does an act sufficient in itself legally to divest his title, with the express intention of relinquishing and abandoning the property, it is not easy to perceive why he may not do so. * * * If the owner sees proper to abandon his property, and evidences his intention by an act legally sufficient to vest or divest the ownership, why may he not do so in the case of land as well the common law abandonment is not predicable of a perfect legal title.¹ It may safely be stated as a legal principle that in no case can a man lose his title to land by any act or oral declaration of abandonment unless it comes within the principle of estoppel,² or is followed by such possession by a person claiming adversely as brings the case within the statute of limitations.³

(12) Alienation — (a) In General. — Alienation, conveyance, or purchase in its limited sense comprehends any method, as by sale, gift, settlement, devise, or the like, whereby an alienor either voluntarily or in pursuance of some lawful authority divests himself or another of title to an estate and by the same act vests it in an alienee, who voluntarily accepts it.⁴ In early times a transfer of real property was always accompanied by some symbolical ceremony which served to impress the fact upon the minds of witnesses who might afterwards be called to testify concerning it, as induction into an office, instalment in a dignity, or livery of seisin of land.⁵ But when the art of writing became a more general accomplishment this ceremony as legal evidence was superseded by the more convenient method of making some written memorandum or record of the conveyance, and this was afterwards made a legal requisite.⁶ The modes by which alienations are thus evidenced, and the alienees assured in the lawful possession of their acquisitions, are three in number, viz., by deed, by matter of record, and by will.

(b) Modes of Assurance — aa. By Deed. — Assurance by deed, the most usual method of evidencing the transfer of real property, is effected by the proper execution of a written instrument by the alienor describing the thing and quantity of interest therein intended to be conveyed, setting forth the conditions of the alienation, and, if it be made on the behalf of another, reciting the authority therefor. The various sorts of deeds and the requisites and component parts of each are treated elsewhere in this work.⁷

bb. By Matter of Record — (aa) In General. — An assurance by matter of record is such evidence of alienation as is derived from the rolls of some court, office, or legislative body, the sanction of whose authority has been invoked by the parties to substantiate, preserve, and be a perpetual testimony of the transfer.⁸

(bb) Private Acts of Legislature — In England. — Of this nature are private acts of Parliament. These are not unfrequently resorted to in cases where the alienation of real property would be expedient, and yet where, because of the entangled condition of the estate, or the disability of some person interested therein, an ordinary deed would be ineffectual to pass the title and the courts are powerless to give relief.⁹ In such cases the omnipotent power of Parliament is called in to solve the difficulty by giving its sanction to the conveyance, and thus assuring to the purchaser the estate freed from the latent or remote claims of all who are concluded by the act. In dealing with private bills, Parliament exercises judicial as well as legislative functions, and the

as of a chattel? It might go to the government instead of the first occupant upon the principle upon which land escheated or become derelict belongs to the state. But I do not perceive that that would affect the question of power in the owner to abandon the property." Quoted in Tiebout v. Millican, 61 Tex. 517.

act, though it binds all parties concerned, is yet looked upon rather as a private conveyance than as a solemn act of the legislature, and has been relieved against when obtained upon fraudulent suggestions.¹ Such acts were very numerous just after the Restoration, but they are, at present, enacted with great deliberation and caution, nothing being done without the consent expressly given of all persons in being and capable of consent that have the remotest interest in the matter; and an equivalent in money or other estate is usually settled upon infants or persons not in esse, or not of capacity to act for themselves, who are to be concluded by the act.²

In the United States, private statutes passing title to land, and in various ways operating upon the property rights of individuals, have frequently been enacted, and their constitutionality has been upheld in all cases where their provisions have not transcended the legitimate exercise of legislative functions.³

Authorizing Conversion of Realty into Personality. — The most conspicuous instances of such legislation are acts authorizing the conversion of realty into personality where a change in the character of the property would be advantageous to those beneficially interested in it. In the case of infants,⁴ lunatics,⁵ or trusts for charitable uses,⁶ the power of the legislature as parens patriæ to sanction such change is undoubted. But the legislature has no power by special statute to authorize the sale of land in which adults, competent to act for themselves, have an interest, vested or contingent,⁷ unless they consent to the sale,⁸ or it is authorized for the purpose of discharging debts which constitute charges against the estate.⁹

5. The Legislature Has Power to Authorize the Guardian of a Person Non Compos Mentis to sell a part of his ward's real estate and apply the proceeds to discharge incumbrances on other parts thereof. And notice need not be given to the ward before granting such authority to his guardian. Davison v. Johonnot, 7 Met. (Mass.) 388, 41 Am. Dec. 448.

6. Trusts for Charitable Uses. — The legislature has power to direct a sale of real estate devised to charitable purposes — even though it be provided by the devise that the estate shall never be sold — in cases where lapse of time, or change in the condition of the property, or circumstances attending it, make it prudent and beneficial to the charity to alien the specific land and invest the proceeds in other securities, taking care, however, that no diversion of the gift be permitted. Stanley v. Colt, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 119.

7. Estate of Persons Sui Juris. — The legislature cannot, against the consent of persons sui juris seized of a vested estate, authorize the sale of their real estate. *Brenham v. 8. Sale of Land by Trustee for Benefit of Cestuis Que Trustent. — An act authorizing the sale of land by a trustee for the benefit of and with the express consent of the cestuis que trustent is valid. Suydam v. Williamson, 24 How. (U. S.) 427; Williamson v. Suydam, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 723; Sohier v. Massachusetts Gen. Hospital, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 483; Carroll v. Olmsted, 16 Ohio 251; *Norris v. 9. Authorizing Sale for Payment of Debts. — A private act authorizing an administrator to sell the real estate of the decedent for the payment of his debts is invalid. Watkins v. Holman, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 25; Holman v. Norfolk Bank, 12 Ala. 369; Davenport v. Young, 16 Ill. 548, 63 Am. Dec. 320; Kibby v. Chitwood, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 91. But see Jones v. Perry, 10 Yerg. Act Transferring Legal Title. — For stronger reasons a private act transferring the legal title of land from one person to another is unconstitutional and void,¹ unless all interested in the property consent to the alienation,² or the act merely conveys a bare legal title to one who is already the equitable owner.³

(cc) Public Grants. — In England, all grants from the crown are assured to the subject by matter of record, effected by enrollment of a letter patent, issued by the crown office and delivered to the grantee upon a warrant drawn by and signed by the lord chancellor and countersigned first by the law officers of the crown and finally by the king himself. Letters patent formerly issued for grants of corporeal as well as incorporeal property, but they are now confined to the creation of offices, dignities, and the like, the disposal of crown lands being vested by various acts of Parliament in certain fiscal officers.⁴

In the United States. — A grant of public lands by special act of Congress is likewise an assurance by matter of record. For while it is customary for such a grant to be evidenced by the issuance of a patent, yet, if the act be couched in words of present grant, it operates as a conveyance and passes title⁵ irrespective of the fact whether any patent is issued or not,⁶ and the statute of limitations begins to run against the grantee from the date such act becomes effective.⁷

(dd) Fines and Common Recoveries. — A fine and a common recovery are both assurances derived from the record of a collusive suit instituted by the alienee against the alienor, in which the title to the land intended to be conveyed is determined to be in the former by a judgment founded, in the case of a fine, upon an acknowledgment of the alienee's superior right, entered of record by the alienor, by leave of the court, and, in the case of a recovery, upon the default of the fictitious warrantor whom the alienor has vouched to defend his title.⁸ They are of very ancient origin, but derive their importance from the encouragement which the courts, by what has been characterized as a bold and unexampled stretch of judicial legislation, gave to their use as a means of barring an estate tail and thus evading the statute de donis, the repeal of administration upon the estate, is constitutional. Bruce v. Bradshaw, 69 Ala. 360.

A state legislature may, constitutionally, pass a private act authorizing a court to decree, on the petition of an administrator, private sale of the real estate of an intestate to pay his debts, even though the act should not require notice to heirs or to any one, and although the same general subject is regulated by general statute much more full and provident in its nature. Florentine v. Barton, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 210.

Act Vesting Intestate's Estate in Commissioners to Sell for Debts Is Constitutional. — Shehan v. Barnett, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 594.

But the Power to Determine the Existence of Debts Is Judicial, not legislative, and a private act authorizing an administrator to sell land and apply the proceeds to the payment of the debts of the estate, without any judicial inquiry as to the existence of such debts before paying them, is unconstitutional. Rozier v. Fagan, 46 Ill. 404; Lane v. Doe, 4 Ill. 238, 36 Am. Dec. 543.

Acts Ratifying Defective Conveyances. — A private statute ratifying and confirming a sale and conveyance of land, made by an executor without legal authority, is valid. Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 627. Compare Sohier v. Massachusetts Gen. Hospital, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 483.

which it was found impossible to secure.¹ They were abolished in England by statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 74.² Though not unknown, they appear never to have been very extensively used in the United States,³ and seem to have become obsolete where they have not been expressly abolished by statute.⁴

cc. BY WILL. — An assurance by will is such evidence of title as proceeds from the probate of the instrument,⁵ the requisites and interpretation of which will be treated elsewhere in this work.⁶

dd. SURRENDER OR DESTRUCTION OF TITLE DEED: — The rule seems to be well settled that the voluntary surrender or destruction of a deed of conveyance, whether recorded or not, does not divest the grantee of the title which he derived by means of it, or revest such title in the grantor;⁷ though it has been held that the grantee may, by his act, be afterwards estopped from setting up the deed or showing its contents by parol.⁸

In Delaware and Pennsylvania common recoveries are still recognized in the statutes as a mode of barring estates tail. Laws Del., Rev. Code of 1852, as amended in 1893, c. 83, § 26; Bright. Purd. Dig. (Pa.), p. 809.

4. Abolition by Statute. — Fines and common recoveries are prohibited in Florida. Rev. Stat. Fla. 1892, § 1953.

They were abolished in New Jersey in 1799 (Gen. Stat. N. J., title Conveyances, art. 137; Croxall v. Shererd, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 268). But in 1806 there is the report of a recovery suffered under special act of the legislature authorizing it. Richman v. Lippincott, 29 N. J. L. 44.

They were abolished in New York in 1830, and a simpler system substituted. McGregor v. Comstock, 17 N. Y. 162.

In many of the states they have been rendered obsolete by the conversion of estates tail into estates in fee simple. See the title ESTATES, vol. II, p. 376.

Wisconsin. — Parker v. Kane, 4 Wis. 12.

But it seems that the surrender or cancellation of an unregistered mortgage, or any instrument of defeasance only, revests the title in the mortgagor. Patterson v. Yeaton, 47 Me. 308.

8. Grantee Estopped to Set Up Deed. — Speer v. Speer, 7 Ind. 178, 63 Am. Dec. 478; Dodge v. Dodge, 33 N. H. 487; Sawyer v. Peters, 50 N. H. 143; Howard v. Huffman, 3 Head (Tenn.) 562, 75 Am. Dec. 783; Parker v. Kane, 4 Wis. 12.

Rights of Grantee's Creditors. — A creditor of the grantee may levy an execution against the land and recover possession by ejectment against the grantor. Botsford v. Morehouse, 4 Conn. 550. Or he may attach it in the possession of a subsequent purchaser with notice. Marshall v. Fisk, 6 Mass. 24, 4 Am. Dec. 76.

But in Blaney v. Hanks, 14 Iowa 400, it was held that a court of equity will not enforce the lien of a judgment against the grantee rendered after such cancellation, if the cancellation was made in good faith upon a repayment of the consideration, and with no intention to defraud creditors.

Title of Subsequent Purchasers. — A subsequent conveyance by the grantor vests a good title in the grantee, if he be a bona fide purchaser without notice of the former deed. Patterson v. Yeaton, 47 Me. 308. But not if he purchased with notice. Marshall v. Fisk, 6 Mass. 24, 4 Am. Dec. 76.

which is not recorded, and B, wishing to convey the same land to C, surrenders the deed to A, and A makes a new deed to C, B is estopped from claiming title as against C. Lawrence v. Stratton, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 163. And it has been held that C's title to the land will prevail against that of a creditor of B, to whom it was subsequently set off on execution. Holbrook v. Tirrell, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 105.

1. Real Release. — In Booth v. Kinsey, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 568, it was said: "A real release is where the creditor declares that he considers the debt as acquitted; it is equivalent to a payment, and renders the thing no longer due; 'consequently it liberates all the debtors of it, as there can be no debtors without something due.'" See also the title RELEASE AND DISCHARGE.

3. Real Resident Occupier. — It has been held that to constitute a person a real resident occupier, within the meaning of an English statute regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, he must sleep upon the premises. Reg. v. Allmey, 35 J. P. 534; Reg. v. Manchester, (1899) 1 Q. B. 574, 68 L. J. Q. B. D. 358.

4. Real Securities — Investment. (See also the title INVESTMENTS, vol. 17, pp. 439, 445.) — By the English Trustees Act, § 1, trustees are empowered to invest in real or inheritable securities. As to what mortgages are real securities within this provision, see Sheffield, etc., Permanent Bldg. Soc. v. Aizlewood, 44 Ch. D. 412; Want v. Campain, 9 Times L. R. 254; Webb v. Jonas, 39 Ch. 5. Real Services — Civil Law. (See also the title EASEMENTS, vol. 10, p. 397.) — A real service is defined to be "a service which one estate owes to another; or the right of doing something, or of having a privilege in one man's estate for the advantage and convenience of the owner of another estate." * * *

The estate unto which the service is due is called prædium dominans, or the ruling estate, and the other estate which suffers or yields the service is called prædium serviens, or an estate subject to a privilege or service. To constitute such service it is therefore necessary that there be two estates, the one giving and the other receiving the advantage." Angell on Watercourses, § 142, quoted in Morgan v. Mason, 20 Ohio 409.

6. Real Statute. — Saul v. His Creditors, 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 594, quoting 4 Œuvres D'Agusseau 669.

"Real statutes are those which have principally for their object property, and which do not speak of persons except in relation to property." Story on Conflict of Laws, § 13, quoted in Companhia de Mocambique v. British South Africa Co., (1892) 2 Q. B. 396.

In Prats v. His Creditors, 2 Rob. (La.) 507, it was said: "The peculiar character and true effect of a real statute is to operate upon and regulate immovable property, without reference to the persons owning the same."

7. Real Warranty. — See Hardy v. Pecot, 104 La. 136.

8. Rear. — In Read v. Clarke, 109 Mass. 82, it was held, where a testator devised his messuage and "the two stable lots in the rear thereof," that the word rear did not necessarily mean directly behind the messuage.

Rear of the Lot. — See Keening v. Ayling, 126 Mass. 404.

9. Reason of. — The charter of a bridge company required the payment of "damages, if any, * * * by reason of the erection of the bridge." It was held that the words "by reason of," in the connection in which they stood, meant the same thing as "on account of" or "because of" the erection of the bridge. Buckwalter v. Black Rock Bridge Co., 38 Pa. St. 287.

Where, in building a railway, the defendant cut down and removed timber on the plaintiff's lands, it was held that the loss of the trees was damage or injury sustained by the plain.

tiff by reason of the railway. McArthur v. Northern, etc., R. Co., 15 Ont. 733, affirmed 17 Ont. App. 86.

Mere Glimmering of Reason — Testamentary Capacity. — In Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 352, the doctrine was stated as deducible from the authorities that "a mere glimmering of reason" was sufficient to sustain a will. For explanation of the term, as thus used, see Terry v. Buffington, 11 Ga. 345. See generally the title TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

1. A Reasonable Act has been defined as such an act as the law requires. Bouv. L. Dict.; Levering v. Union Transp., etc., Co., 42 Mo. 95, 97 Am. Dec. 320. And see ACT, vol. 1, p. 576, note.

Reasonable Appearance of Danger. — See the titles REASONABLE DOUBT, post; SELF-DEFENSE.

"Reasonable Certainty is the being free from reasonable doubt." State v. Shaw, 4 Jones L. (49 N. Car.) 443. See also the title REASONABLE DOUBT, post.

Reasonable and Competent Support. — Where a will provided that a beneficiary was to have a reasonable and competent support out of the estate, it was held that this did not mean merely the food and clothing necessary to sustain life, but a support in a place and manner in which the party had been accustomed to live. Ellerbe v. Ellerbe, Spears Eq. (S. Car.) 329, 40 Am. Dec. 623. See also the title SUPPORT AND MAINTENANCE.

Reasonable Creature — Murder. — State v. Jones, Walk. (Miss.) 85.

Reasonable Expectation. — A person who begins business without capital and with a mortgage on all his assets, and who afterwards becomes bankrupt, has contracted his debts without reasonable or probable ground of expectation of being able to pay, within the English Bankruptcy Act, 1883, 46 & 47 Vict., c. 52, § 28, subsec. 3 (c). Ex p. White, 14 Q. B. D. 600. See also Ex p. Downman, 9 Jur. N. S. 811, 32 L. J. Bankr. 49; Ex p. Mortimore, 3 De G. F. & J. 599. And see the title INSOLVENCY AND BANKRUPTCY, vol. 16, pp. 795, 796.

Reasonable Facilities. — Under an English statute providing that railroad companies shall afford, according to their respective powers, all "reasonable facilities" for the receiving, forwarding, etc., of traffic upon their respective lines, it was held that the mere refusal by a railway company to receive and forward the traffic of persons in general, except upon the prepayment of charges somewhat in excess of the maximum authorized rates, was not a denial of "reasonable facilities." Reg. v. Railway Com'rs, 22 Q. B. D. 642, 40 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 59. See also the titles CARRIERS OF GOODS, vol. 5, pp. 167 et seq., 177 et seq.; INTERSTATE COMMERCE, vol. 17, p. 149 et seq.

"Reasonable" and "Fair" Synonymous. — See FAIR — FAIRLY, vol. 12, p. 710.

Fit and Appropriate to the End in View. — State v. Vandersluis, 42 Minn. 131.

Reasonable Fitness — Master and Servant. — In Garnett v. Phoenix Bridge Co., 98 Fed. Rep. 194, it was said: "The obligation referred to has frequently been said to require that the machinery and appliances provided for the use of the servant shall be reasonably, not absolutely, fit; but this terse statement of the matter is deficient because of its omission to define the term 'reasonably fit,' and to supply this omission those cases must be consulted in which it has been held that reasonable fitness is such as may be attained by the bestowal of that degree of care and diligence which, under the circumstances, and in view of the nature of the work to be done, an ordinarily prudent master, if properly regardful of the welfare of his servants, would exercise for their safety." See also Reilly v. Campbell, 20 U. S. App. 334; Hough v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 100 U. S. 213; Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454; Tuttle v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 122 U. S. 189; Baulek v. New York, etc., R. Co., 59 N. Y. 356; Titus v. Bradford, etc., R. Co., 136 Pa. St. 626; Geno v. Tall Mountain Paper Co., 68 Vt. 568. And see the title MASTER AND SERVANT, vol. 20, p. 74 et seq.

Impartial. — Stone v. Stevens, 12 Conn. 219, 30 Am. Dec. 611; Thompson v. Beacon Valley Rubber Co., 56 Conn. 498.

Reasonable and Just. — In Sweet v. Rechel, 159 U. S. 400, it was said: "Reasonable compensation and just compensation mean the same thing." See also Osgood v. Nelson, L. R. 5 H. L. 636; Rhinehart v. Schuyler, 7 Ill. 536; and see JUST, vol. 18, p. 4, note.

Reasonable Man — Self-defense. — See the title SELF-DEFENSE, and see State v. Cain, 20 W. Va. 705.

Reasonable Mind. — "A reasonable mind is a sensible one, fairly judicious in its action, and at least somewhat cautious in reaching its conclusions." Brewer v. Jacobs, 22 Fed. Rep. 229.

Reasonable Portion. — A power to charge estates "with reasonable portions or fortunes for younger children, and for their maintenance and education," is sufficiently certain to be capable of execution; and the word reasonable there is applicable not only to the amount of the portion, but also to the time and occasion on which the child would want it. Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, Beatty 328.

"Ordinary" and "Reasonable" Synonymous. — See ORDINARY — ORDINARILY, vol. 21, p. 1006, note, and see Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Noble, 142 Ill. 578; Taylor v. Ballard, 24 Wash. 191; Read v. Morse, 34 Wis. 315.

Reasonable Possibility. — In Bonner v. State, 107 Ala. 107, it was said that "reasonable possibility" is at last no more than a possibility." See also Sims v. State, 100 Ala. 23.

Reasonably Practicable — Negative Direction. — In Wales v. Thomas, 16 Q. B. D. 347, a direction that a set of affirmative and negative rules should be observed so far as reasonably practicable was held not to apply to the negative rules unless under very exceptional circumstances. Day, J., said: "It is always possible to do nothing."

Reasonable and Probable Damage. — In an action for the condemnation of land for railroad purposes, the jury was instructed that the owner was entitled to just compensation for means in a reasonable manner; consistently with reason; not extravagantly or excessively; tolerably; moderately; in a moderate degree; fairly.¹

REASONABLE CARE.—See the titles BAILMENTS, vol. 3, p. 732; NEGLIGENCE, vol. 21, p. 455; and the cross-references there given.

REASONABLE CAUSE. (See also the titles MALICIOUS PROSECUTION, vol. 19, p. 647; SEARCHES AND SEIZURES. And see REASONABLE, ante.)—See note 2.

REASONABLE DILIGENCE.—See the title NEGLIGENCE, vol. 21, p. 455; and see DILIGENCE, vol. 9, pp. 455, 456, and the cross-references there given.

the land taken and for all "reasonable and probable damages" to the balance of the land not taken. It was held that such instruction did not include possible, speculative, or remote damages, and was proper. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Bowman, 122 Ill. 606. For the general rule in such a case, see the title EMINENT DOMAIN, vol. 10, p. 1164 et seq.

Reasonable Cause and Probable Cause Synonymous.—See the title MALICIOUS PROSECUTION, vol. 19, p. 658, note, and see Hicks v. Brantley, 102 Ga. 269.

Reasonable Question.—In Harding v. Long, 103 N. Car. 5, the court said: "We are unable to draw any distinction between 'proving beyond reasonable doubt' and 'beyond reasonable question,' unless we treat the latter expression as the stronger of the two." See also the title REASONABLE DOUBT, post.

Question for Jury.—"What is reasonable is a question for the jury." Chamberlain v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co., 55 N. H. 265. See also the title QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT, ante, p. 543.

Reasonable Regulation.—Authority "to cause the streets" of a city "to be lighted" and to make "reasonable regulations" with reference thereto has been held not to empower a city government to grant to one company an exclusive right to light the streets with gas, to the exclusion of all other methods of illumination, for thirty years. Saginaw Gas-Light Co. v. Saginaw, 28 Fed. Rep. 529, 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 562.

Reasonable Right of Way—Fences.—In Sizer v. Quinlan, 82 Wis. 390, it was held that a reservation in a deed of a reasonable right of way across land conveyed did not entitle the owner of the dominant estate to enclose the right of way with fences.

Reasonable Provocation.—See State v. Ellis, 74 Mo. 217, and see ADEQUATE, vol. 1, p. 632. See also the titles MURDER AND MANSLAUGHTER, vol. 21, p. 174 et seq.; SELF-DEFENSE.

Reasonable Prudence.—"Reasonable prudence" is a relative term. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, quoted in Sommer v. Carbon Hill Coal Co., (C. C. A.) 89 Fed. Rep. 59; Crooker v. Pacific Lounge, etc., Co., (Wash. 1902) 69 Pac. Rep. 361.

Self-defense—Reasonable Danger.—See the titles REASONABLE DOUBT, post; SELF-DEFENSE.

Reasonable Use.—In Bartels v. Brain, 13 Utah 162, evidence as to the condition, situation, and adaptation of land for a particular use, the declarations of the parties as to the use to which the land was to be put, and that it had no rental value for any other purpose, was held admissible to show the intent of the parties in the use of the phrase "reasonable use" in a lease.

What is a reasonable use of a river by a millowner, and by those who want to float logs past the mill, is a question of fact and depends upon the size and nature of the stream, the extent and kinds of business upon it, and all other circumstances. Pearson v. Rolfe, 76 Me. 380. See also Pool v. Lewis, 41 Ga. 169.

Reasonable Wear and Tear Excepted. (See also the title LANDLORD AND TENANT, vol. 18, pp. 246, 250, 254.)—Where the lessee of goods covenanted to restore them to the lessor at the expiration of the term in as good order as they were before, "reasonable wear and tear only excepted," it was held that the phrase "reasonable wear and tear only excepted" referred to the order and condition of the goods, so as to exclude bad repair, breakages, etc., not arising from reasonable wear and tear, but did not amount to a guaranty of the continued existence of the goods. Chamberlen v. Trenouth, 23 U. C. C. P. 497.

And that the term does not include a total loss, see Anglin v. Henderson, 21 U. C. Q. B. 27.

In Green v. Kelly, 20 N. J. L. 544, it was held that in an article of agreement for the sale of real estate by which the vendor stipulated to deliver possession of the premises, at a future day, in as good repair as they were in at the time of the execution of the contract, "natural and reasonable wear and tear excepted," the exception covered only such decay or depreciation in value of the property as might arise from ordinary and reasonable use; an injury to the property by a freshet was held not to be within the exception. See also the title VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

1. Horn v. Territory, 8 Okla. 56.

Attendant Circumstances.—Where the question was whether a street was in reasonably safe condition to travel, the court said that the word reasonably may involve the consideration of many attendant circumstances. Denver v. Moewes, 15 Colo. App. 31. See also the title STREETS AND SIDEWALKS.

2. Reasonable Cause. (See also the title DIVORCE, vol. 9, pp. 765 (note), 766.)—In Eshbach v. Eshbach, 23 Pa. St. 345, it was held that a reasonable cause which would justify a wife's desertion and abandonment of her husband must be such as would entitle her to a divorce. See also Butler v. Butler, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 284, 1 Am. L. J. N. S. 388.

Reasonable Cause to Believe Debtor to Be Insolvent.—See the title INSOLVENCY AND BANKRUPTCY, vol. 16, pp. 735, 736, and see Daniels v. Palmer, 35 Minn. 347; Daniels v. Zumbrota Bank, 35 Minn. 351.

I. PROOF BEYOND REASONABLE DOUBT NECESSARY IN CRIMINAL CASES — 1. General Doctrine. — It is a well-settled doctrine of the criminal law that in order to find a defendant guilty in a criminal case a preponderance of evidence is not sufficient. The jury must be convinced of his guilt, by the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt,¹ and it is error to refuse to instruct that guilt must be established beyond a reasonable doubt.¹

Misdemeanors.—The rule that the defendant is entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt of his guilt extends alike to all crimes, whether felonies or misdemeanors.²

Matters of Defense.—The better rule, in spite of some conflict in the authorities, is that matters of affirmative defense, such as alibi, justification, excuse, or mitigation need not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt by the defense, nor even by a preponderance of evidence. It is sufficient to warrant an acquittal for the defense to produce such evidence as creates in the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt of the offense charged.³

2. Circumstantial Evidence. — Circumstantial evidence is sufficient to warrant a conviction for a crime where it establishes the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.¹ But the circumstantial evidence must be such as to exclude to a moral certainty every reasonable hypothesis but that of the guilt of the defendant of the offense imputed to him, or in other words, all the facts proved must not only be consistent with and point to his guilt, but they must be inconsistent with any other reasonable hypothesis.² The hypothesis must, however, be a reasonable one to justify an acquittal.¹ It is not essential, in order to establish the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt, that the crime could not have been committed by another person.²

3. Degree of Crime. — If the jury entertains a reasonable doubt as to which of two degrees of a crime the defendant is guilty, as, for instance, whether of murder in the first or the second degree, the defendant is entitled to the benefit of such doubt, and can be convicted only of the lower offense.³

In Com. v. Goodwin, 14 Gray (Mass.) 55, the rule was stated to be that "the circumstances must be such as to produce a moral certainty of guilt, and to exclude any other reasonable hypothesis."

Hypothesis Should Be Consistent with Evidence in Case. — It is not error to refuse to instruct the jury, in a criminal case, that where the evidence is purely circumstantial, then, if there is any reasonable theory by which the defendant may not be guilty, the jury is bound to acquit. The instruction is bad as wholly ignoring the requirement that the theory or hypothesis of innocence shall be consistent with all the evidence in the case. Padfield v. People, 146 Ill. 661. 4. Elements of Offense and Each Fact in Case. — To sustain a conviction all the elements of the crime charged must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt;¹ and a reasonable doubt as to a material fact essential to the defendant's guilt will inure to his benefit and entitle him to an acquittal.² But the fact must be material or a reasonable doubt as to it will not warrant an acquittal.³

Circumstantial Evidence — Links in Chain. — Where conviction is sought upon evidence purely circumstantial, it has been held that every material circumstance or link in the chain of testimony must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.⁴

1. Elements. — U. S. v. Kie, 7 West. Coast Rep. 15, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,528b; Jones v. State, 107 Ala. 93; People v. Eckert, 19 Cal. 603; People v. Cohn, 76 Cal. 386; *State v. A reasonable doubt must exist in the minds of the jurors as to the intent to kill before they can find a verdict of murder in the second degree. Warren v. Com., 37 Pa. St. 45.

Intent Circumstantial Evidence. — Although where an act itself is sought to be established by circumstantial evidence the proof must exclude every other hypothesis than that of the prisoner's guilt, it is otherwise if the act is admitted or proved by direct testimony and only the intent with which it is committed is in question. State v. Maxwell, 42 Iowa 208.

Whole Case. — But it has been said that a reasonable doubt must arise from the whole case and not from a single fact. See Carlton v. People, 150 Ill. 181, 41 Am. St. Rep. 346; State v. Schoenwald, 31 Mo. 147. And see infra, this title, Definition and Instructions.

In Barr v. State, 10 Tex. App. 507, it was held that the doctrine of reasonable doubt applies to the general issue of guilty or not guilty, and that it was not error to refuse a special instruction which attempted to apply it to each and every fact in proof.

3. Materiality. — Acker v. State, 52 N. J. L. 259; State v. Crane, 110 N. Car. 530.

The doctrine of reasonable doubt has no proper application to mere matters of subsidiary evidence. Wade v. State, 71 Ind. 535.

Allegations of Indictment. — Where an indictment contained all the necessary allegations to constitute a good charge of the crime alleged to have been committed, it was held to be no error to instruct that if these allegations were sustained beyond a reasonable doubt the state was entitled to a conviction. Walker v. State, 136 Ind. 663.

Independent Circumstances. — Where various independent circumstances are relied upon to establish a fact, an instruction that the jury must be satisfied on the whole evidence of the guilt of the defendant is sufficient. State v. Crane, 110 N. Car. 530. See also State v. Frank, 5 Jones L. (50 N. Car.) 384.

Fact Inconsistent with Guilt. — In State v. Roberts, 15 Oregon 187, it was held that the court did not err in refusing to tell the jury that proof by the defendant, by a preponderance of the evidence, of one single fact inconsistent with the defendant's guilt was sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt, and the jury should acquit the defendant. To the same effect see Davidson v. State, 135 Ind. 254; State v. Johnson, 37 Minn. 493.

Illinois. — The law does not require that the jury should believe that every fact in a criminal case has been proved beyond a reasonable doubt before it can find the accused guilty. The reasonable doubt the jury is permitted to entertain must be as to the guilt of the accused on the whole evidence, and not as to any important fact in the case. Mullins v. People, 110 Ill. 42; Leigh v. People, 113 Ill. 372; Davis v. People, 114 Ill. 86; Weaver v. People, 132 Ill. 536; Lyons v. People, 137 Ill. 602; Jamison v. People, 145 Ill. 357.

Alabama. — In Dent v. State, 105 Ala. 14, the following instruction was sustained: "While the law requires the guilt of the accused to be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, it does not require that each fact which may aid the jury in reaching the conclusion of guilt shall be clearly proved, but that on the whole evidence the jury must be able to pronounce that guilt is proved to a moral certainty." See also Ming v. State, 73 Ala. 1; Murphy v. State, 108 Ala. 10; Barker v. State, 126 Ala. 73; Eggleston v. State, 129 Ala. 80.

But in Williams v. State, 52 Ala. 26, it was held error to charge the jury in a criminal case that although it may have a reasonable doubt of "any single fact in the testimony of any witness," it cannot acquit unless such fact is "material to the issue joined."

4. Each Link in Chain of Circumstances. — People v. Phipps, 39 Cal. 326; People v. Smith, 106 Cal. 73; Clare v. People, 9 Colo. 122; Graves v. People, 18 Colo. 170; Bressler v. People, 117 Ill. 422; Sumner v. State, 5 Blackf.

But in a number of cases it has been held that the jury need not be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of each link in the chain of circumstances relied upon to establish guilt, but only of the ultimate fact of guilt upon the whole evidence.¹

Right to Instruction. — It has been held in a number of cases that it is sufficient to instruct the jurors that they should acquit if upon the whole case they have a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt. It is not necessary that they should be instructed that they must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of each material fact required to convict. The former instruction necessarily includes the latter, and sufficiently directs the jury that each fact material to conviction must be established beyond a reasonable doubt, while the latter has a tendency to distract the attention of the jury from the consideration of the whole case, and to concentrate it upon some particular fact or hypothesis.² The question, however, is a disputed one, and in some jurisdictions it has been held to be error to refuse an instruction that a particular fact, essential to the defendant's guilt, must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, although there was a general charge that his guilt must be proved, (Ind.) 579, 36 Am. Dec. 561; Rains v. State, 152 Ind. 69, Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 318, 52 Am. Dec. 711; People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460, 11 Am. St. Rep. 512; People v. Foley, 64 Mich. 148; People v. Fairchild, 48 Mich. 31; Territory v. McAndrews, 3 Mont. 158; State v. Gleim, 17 Mont. 17, 52 Am. St. Rep. 655; Dossett v. U. S., 3 Okla. 593; Johnson v. State, 18 Tex. App. 385. See also CHAIN, vol. 5, p. 812.

Where the evidence is circumstantial, each circumstance must be as distinctively proved as if the whole case turned upon it. State v. Meissimer, 75 N. Car. 385.

1. Jury Need Not Be Satisfied as to Each Link. — Siebert v. People, 143 Ill. 571; Jamison v. People, 145 Ill. 357; Carlton v. People, 150 Ill. 181, 41 Am. St. Rep. 346; Keating v. People, 160 Ill. 480; Gott v. People, 187 Ill. 249; Bressler v. People, (Ill. 1885) 3 N. E. Rep. 521; State v. Hayden, 45 Iowa 11; State v. Myers, 12 Wash. 77.

Nebraska. — It has been held not to be error to refuse to instruct the jury that each link in the chain of circumstances relied upon to establish the defendant's guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. The court said: "If it is understood that the words have reference only to such evidentiary facts as strengthen others from which guilt is to be inferred, the form is not objectionable, and may be considered correct." Jameson v. State, 25 Neb. 189. See also Marion v. State, 16 Neb. 358; Bradshaw v. State, 17 Neb. 155; Walbridge v. State, 13 Neb. 237. Compare Heldt v. State, 20 Neb. 492, 57 Am. Rep. 835.

Circumstantial Evidence Not Necessarily Chain. — In Tompkins v. State, 32 Ala. 569, it was held that a charge to the jury in a criminal case where the evidence against the accused was entirely circumstantial that it was bound to acquit the defendant "if there is a single link wanting in the chain of circumstantial evidence" should be refused, as calculated to mislead the jury. The court said: "Coming to the conclusion that circumstantial evidence is not necessarily a chain, or composed of links, we think the tendency of the charge asked was to mislead or embarrass the jury, and that it was rightly refused." To the same effect see Wharton v. State, 73 Ala. 366; Tompkins v. State, 32 Ala. 569.

In State v. Watkins, 106 La. 380, it was held that the trial court correctly refused to charge the jury that "this doctrine of reasonable doubt not only applies to the whole case, but to each and every incident connected with it."

An instruction that if the jury entertains a reasonable doubt as to any fact necessary to constitute the defendant's guilt it should acquit him was disapproved in Jolly v. Com., (Ky. 1901) 61 S. W. Rep. 49.

Time of Offense. — In State v. Hopkins, 94 Iowa 86, where one charge stated that the defendant's guilt must be shown beyond a reasonable doubt, and another, dealing with the time when the offense must be shown to have happened, did not state that it was to be shown upon a consideration of the whole case, beyond a reasonable doubt.¹

5. Doubt Entertained by One Juror. — Where a reasonable doubt is entertained by one juror the defendant cannot be found guilty, and it has been held error to refuse instructions to that effect.² Of course, this does not involve the idea that the jury must acquit when a single juror has a reasonable doubt.³

6. Reasonable Doubt of Law. — It has been held that in the construction of a penal statute all reasonable doubts concerning the meaning of the statute should operate in favor of the defendant.⁴ But in those jurisdictions in which the juries in criminal cases are the judges both of the law and of the facts, it has been held that it is not a reasonable doubt of the law that entitles the defendant to a verdict of not guilty.⁵

II. DEFINITION AND INSTRUCTIONS — 1. Necessity of Defining Term. — There have been many attempts to define and interpret the term "reasonable doubt," as used in this connection, but it is apprehended that such attempts are futile; that the words are of plain and unmistakable meaning, and that any definition on the part of the court tends only to confuse the jury and to render uncertain an expression which, standing alone, is certain and intelligible. This view has been taken in a number of cases.⁶ Notwithstanding these authorities, beyond a reasonable doubt, it was held that there was no error.

1. Refusal to Instruct Held to Be Error. — People v. Eckert, 19 Cal. 603; Binns v. State, 46 Ind. 311; Kaufman v. State, 49 Ind. 251; Sumner v. State, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 579, 36 Am. Dec. 561; Territory v. Lopez, 3 N. Mex. 104; State v. Crane, 110 N. Car. 530. See also People v. Phipps, 39 Cal. 326.

2. Doubt Entertained by One Juror. — Mitchell v. State, 129 Ala. 23; People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486; Castle v. State, 75 Ind. 146; Fassinow v. State, 89 Ind. 235; Aszman v. State, 123 Ind. 347; McGuire v. State, 2 Ohio Cir. Dec. 318, 3 Ohio Cir. Ct. 551. See also State v. Witt, 34 Kan. 488.

A reasonable doubt is none the less a reasonable doubt because it does not arise in the minds of all the jurors. State v. Sloan, 55 Iowa 217; State v. Stewart, 52 Iowa 284.

Instruction Held Not to Be Necessary. — In State v. Cushing, 17 Wash. 544, it was held that where the court had given a general instruction upon the question of reasonable doubt, it was not necessary to instruct that if a single juror entertained such doubt the defendant should be acquitted. See also State v. Powers, 59 S. Car. 200; State v. Robinson, 12 Wash. 491; State v. Williams, 13 Wash. 335.

In Davis v. State, 63 Ohio St. 173, it was held that a proper charge to a jury in a criminal case was that the jury, and not that each juror, should be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused before finding him guilty. And see State v. Rorabacher, 19 Iowa 154; State v. Hamilton, 57 Iowa 596.

In State v. Sloan, 55 Iowa 217, the following instruction was held to be misleading: "A reasonable doubt is such a doubt as fairly and naturally arises in the minds of the whole jury."

3. Acquittal. — State v. Rorabacher, 19 Iowa 154; State v. Witt, 34 Kan. 488. Compare Stitz v. State, 104 Ind. 359; Keesier v. State, 154 Ind. 242.

4. Reasonable Doubt of Law. — U. S. v. Hart- well, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 396; The Schooner Enterprise, 1 Paine (U. S.) 34; U. S. v. Reese, 5 Dill. (U. S.) 405; U. S. v. Williams, 3 Fed. Rep. 491; U. S. v. Voorhees, 9 Fed. Rep. 144; *U. S. v. See also the title STATUTES.

But this rule was questioned in U. S. v. Huggett, 40 Fed. Rep. 636, where Hammond, J., said: "The defendants first insist that where there is a reasonable doubt the construction should be in their favor. I am not quite prepared to hold that this rule of reasonable doubt, by analogy to the well-known principle which governs a jury in trying the facts, should exempt the defendants from that penalty which they have incurred if the statute be against them, for this would be to abrogate by judicial action every dubious and doubtful enactment; and the elasticity of language is such, and the carelessness of legislation is so fruitful of ambiguity in drawing statutes, that it would be a dangerous doctrine to establish by that broad expression of it. Nor do I find that the Supreme Court of the United States has so expressed it in the cases cited for it in U. S. v. Whittier, 5 Dill. (U. S.) 35; U. S. v. Clayton, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 226, 12 Myer Fed. Dec., § 345, and U. S. v. Comerford, 25 Fed. Rep. 903."

however, there are decisions holding it to be error to refuse to give a definition of reasonable doubt.¹

2. General Definitions and Particular Terms Considered. — Chief Justice Shaw of Massachusetts has given the following definition of a "reasonable doubt": "It is not mere possible doubt; because everything relating to human affairs, and depending on moral evidence, is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge."² And this definition has been adopted by the courts in a number of jurisdictions.³ The above definition is perhaps as accu-

1. Definition of Reasonable Doubt Necessary — Missouri. — A charge in a criminal case relative to the question of reasonable doubt should state what constitutes a reasonable doubt. State v. Christian, 66 Mo. 138; State v. Clark, 147 Mo. 22. Yet in State v. Leeper, 78 Mo. 470, it was held that a failure to explain the meaning of "reasonable doubt" was not erroneous when there had been no request for such explanation. And in State v. Wheeler, 87 Mo. App. 582, the same holding was made with reference to a trial for misdemeanor, though a distinction was taken in regard to felonies. Missouri cases adopting the view that a definition is unnecessary may be found in the last note supra.

Circumstantial Evidence. — In People v. Lachanais, 32 Cal. 433, it was held that a defendant, if he desires it, is entitled to a full and clear instruction as to what the law means by a rational doubt, where the evidence is circumstantial.

By the word "approved" before a case is meant that in that case the appellate court approved of a definition given by the trial court or offered by counsel, or defined the term itself. By "disapproved" is meant that in the case or cases following the appellate court disapproved of the definition given by the trial court, or that it sustained the trial court in refusing to give the definition asked by counsel.¹

Georgia — Approved. — In Fletcher v. State, 90 Ga. 468, the following definition was sustained: "A reasonable doubt is such a doubt as the term itself implies. It is difficult to explain what a reasonable doubt is; it means a doubt that has something to rest upon, some reason that it is based on, such a doubt as would control you and you would be governed by in your own important business affairs; it means such a doubt as a sensible, honest-minded man would reasonably entertain in an honest investigation after truth, a doubt that would arise from the evidence or the want of evidence in the case. It does not mean a mere vague conjecture, or a bare possibility of the innocence of the accused."

In Johnson v. State, 89 Ga. 107, a reasonable doubt is defined to be "such as a reasonable man would have after a careful investigation of any important subject — that prevents his being able to come to a satisfactory conclusion about it one way or the other." See also Peterson v. State, 47 Ga. 524; Dumas v. State, 63 Ga. 600; Hodgkins v. State, 89 Ga. 761; Lewis v. State, 90 Ga. 95.

Illinois — Approved. — The following definition has been sustained in Illinois: "A reasonable doubt is one arising from a candid and impartial investigation of all the evidence, and such as, in the graver transactions of life, would cause a reasonable and prudent man to hesitate and pause." *Dunn v. 1. Necessary Conclusion. — An instruction that if the facts would necessarily lead the mind to the conclusion that the accused is guilty he must be convicted has been held to be erroneous. Rhodes v. State, 128 Ind. 196, 25 Am. St. Rep. 429.

Artificial Doubt not sufficient. State v. Ostrander, 18 Iowa 435.

A Forced Doubt is not sufficient. State v. Ostrander, 18 Iowa 435.

2. A Reasonable Doubt Must Be Actual. Dent v. State, 105 Ala. 14; Talbert v. State, 121 Ala. 33; State v. Lally, 2 Marv. (Del.) 424; Carlton v. People, 150 Ill. 181, 41 Am. 3. Strong. — State v. Senn, 32 S. Car. 392; State v. Bodie, 33 S. Car. 117; State v. Summer, 55 S. Car. 32, 74 Am. St. Rep. 707.

4. Doubt Must Be Clear. — U. S. v. Babcock, (Mo. 1876) 3 Cent. L. J. 143. See also CLEAR, vol. 6, p. 111, note.

But in Bowler v. State, 41 Miss. 578, it was held that a doubt need not be a clear doubt.

And "clearly proven" has been held not to be equivalent to "proven beyond a reasonable doubt." State v. Stewart, 52 Iowa 284.

5. Fair. — People v. Finley, 38 Mich. 482. See also FAIR — FAIRLY, vol. 12, p. 711, note. But see People v. Hubert, 119 Cal. 216, 63 Am. St. Rep. 72, where the term "fair doubt" was criticised.

6. Serious. — Collins v. People, 194 Ill. 506; Earll v. People, 73 Ill. 329; Smith v. People, 74 Ill. 144; State v. Jefferson, 43 La. Ann. 995; Com. v. Harman, 4 Pa. St. 269; *State v. 7. Sensible. — Woodruff v. State, 31 Fla. 320; State v. Jefferson, 43 La. Ann. 995.

Reasonable Doubt Must Be Based on Common Sense. — State v. Harrison, 23 Mont. 79; State v. McCune, 16 Utah 170; Emery v. State, 101 Wis. 627. Compare State v. Paulsell, 115 Cal. 6.

8. Reasonable Doubt Must Be Real Doubt. — State v. Long, 72 Conn. 39; State v. Ostrander, 18 Iowa 438; State v. Clancy, 20 Mont. 502; State v. Neel, 23 Utah 543.

In Missouri it was held that the use of the word "real," in defining reasonable doubt, did not constitute reversible error. State v. Davidson, 95 Mo. 155. See also State v. Butterfield, 75 Mo. 297; State v. Blunt, 91 Mo. 506; State v. Williams, 95 Mo. 247, 6 Am. St. Rep. 46; State v. Walker, 98 Mo. 95.

But in State v. Owens, 79 Mo. 619, the use of the word "real" was much criticised, though the judgment was not reversed on that ground. See also State v. Jones, 86 Mo. 627; State v. Payton, 90 Mo. 220; State v. Smith, 21 Mo. App. 595.

9. Well-founded. — Earll v. People, 73 Ill. 329; Smith v. People, 74 Ill. 144; Collins v. People, 194 Ill. 506; State v. Young, 105 Mo. 634; State v. Davidson, 44 Mo. Substantial Doubt. — A reasonable doubt has been said to be a substantial doubt arising from the evidence.¹

Doubt for Which Reason May Be Given — Founded on Reason. — A reasonable doubt has been defined as a doubt for which a reason or a good reason can be given, a doubt based upon or founded on reason, and these definitions have been sustained in a number of cases.² But in some jurisdictions it has been held to be error to instruct the jury that a reasonable doubt is one that the jury is able to give a reason for,³ while in others such instructions have been disapproved though not held to constitute reversible error.⁴

State*, 125 Ala. 47.

Not Necessarily Reasonable Doubt. — It has been held that a doubt for which a reason may be given is not necessarily a reasonable doubt, although a reasonable doubt may be a doubt for which a reason may be assigned. Talbert

Satisfaction.—When the jurors, after an impartial consideration of the evidence, can say that they are not satisfied of the defendant's guilt they entertain a reasonable doubt;¹ and where they are satisfied of his guilt they can have no reasonable doubt.²

Honest Misgiving.—A reasonable doubt has been defined as an honest misgiving generated by an insufficiency of proof.³

The Phrase "a Reasonable Chance of Mistake" has been held not to be equivalent to "reasonable doubt."⁴

Guess or Surmise.—A reasonable doubt is not a mere guess⁵ or surmise⁶ that the defendant may not be guilty.

A Vague Doubt is not a reasonable doubt.⁷

Whim.—A reasonable doubt is not a mere whim, or whimsical doubt.⁸

Speculative.—A reasonable doubt is not a speculative doubt or a doubt resting on mere speculation.⁹

Probability.—Proof that raises only a strong probability of the guilt of the accused is not the proof beyond a reasonable doubt which is necessary to sustain a conviction.¹⁰ But a probability of the defendant's innocence is a reasonable doubt of his guilt.¹¹

v. State, 121 Ala. 37; Roberts v. State, 122 Ala. 47.

Man of Reason.—In Thomas v. State, 126 Ala. 4, it was held error to charge that "a reasonable doubt is a doubt that a man of reason can give if necessary."

1. Jury Not Satisfied.—U. S. v. Meagher, 37 Fed. Rep. 875.

Entirely Satisfied.—See ENTIRE—ENTIRELY, ETC., vol. 11, p. 49, note. See also People v. Padillia, 42 Cal. 535; People v. Kerrick, 52 Cal. 446; People v. Brown, 56 Cal. 405; People v. Caraillo, 70 Cal. 643.

Fully Satisfied.—Proof beyond a "reasonable doubt" was held to mean "fully satisfied" in State v. Whitson, 111 N. Car. 696.

Defense.—An instruction that the defendant must satisfy the jury that his defense is good has been held to be erroneous. Boykin v. People, 22 Colo. 496.

2. Jury Satisfied.—Brown v. State, 128 Ala. 12; Collins v. People, 104 Ill. 506.

But it has been held that satisfaction of guilt is not the equivalent of satisfaction of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Powers v. State, 74 Miss. 780; Williams v. State, 73 Miss. 820.

Clearly Established by Satisfactory Proof.—This has been held equivalent to proof beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Wreden, 59 Cal. 392.

Not Every Slight Doubt Is a Reasonable Doubt. Warren v. Com., 37 Pa. St. 45.

In Anthony v. State, (Idaho 1899) 55 Pac. Rep. 884, it was held not to be error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury that however slight the reasonable doubt might be, if it was fairly based on the evidence the defendant must be acquitted.

10. Probability of Guilt.—Reg. v. White, 4 F. & F. 383; Guiteau's Case, 10 Fed. Rep. 164; U. S. v. Searcey, 26 Fed. Rep. 435; U. S. v. Babcock, 3 Dill. (U. S.) 581, 3 Cent. L. See also PROBABILITY, ante, p. 108, note.

But an instruction that the guilt of the defendant was to be determined upon the strong probabilities of the case, and that the probabilities of guilt, to warrant a conviction, need not be so strong as to exclude all doubt or possibility of error, has been held not to be erroneous. Dunbar v. U. S., 156 U. S. 185; State v. Harras, 25 Wash. 416.

11. Probability of Defendant's Innocence.—Bain v. State, 74 Ala. 38; Smith v. State, 92 Ala. 30; Winslow v. State, 76 Ala. 42; Whitaker v. State, 106 Ala. 33; Croft v. State, 95 Ala. 3; Browning v. State, 30 Miss. 656; Nelms v. State, 58 Miss. 362.

In Prince v. State, 100 Ala. 144, 46 Am. St. Rep. 28, it was held that a charge that "if there is a probable doubt of the guilt of the defendant the jury must acquit" was properly refused. It was further held in that case that a charge that "if there is a probability of the defendant's innocence" the jury must acquit was free from error, and should be given when requested in writing by the defendant.

Abiding Conviction — Moral Certainty. — Where the jury entertains an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge, it has been held that its truth has been established beyond a reasonable doubt.¹ The two phrases "beyond a reasonable doubt" and "to a moral certainty" are said to be legal equivalents of each other; and when the jury is not convinced to a moral certainty of the defendant's guilt, it entertains a reasonable doubt.² So a juror is said to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt if, from a consideration of the whole evidence, he has an abiding conviction of the truth of the charge.³

An instruction that "a reasonable doubt may arise though there is no probability of the defendant's innocence in the testimony" has been sustained. Carroll v. State, 130 Ala. 99.

A Charge Requiring the Exclusion of a Probable Possibility instead of a reasonable doubt was held to have been properly refused. Tidwell v. State, 70 Ala. 33.

Instructions Demanding the Following Degrees of Proof have been held to be properly refused: Precluding All Possibility of Another's Guilt. — People v. Foley, 64 Mich. 148.

Mathematical Certainty. — Proof of the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt does not mean that the prosecution should demonstrate to a mathematical certainty the guilt of the defendant, as such demonstration is manifestly impossible.¹

Ingenuity of Counsel. — It has been held that a reasonable doubt is not a doubt suggested by the ingenuity of counsel for the defense.²

Far-fetched Doubt. — A reasonable doubt is not a far-fetched doubt.³

Chimerical, Conjectural, or Fanciful Doubts. — By a reasonable doubt is not meant a chimerical, conjectural, or fanciful doubt. A mere conjecture cannot be said to be a reasonable doubt.⁴

Imaginary Doubt. — A reasonable doubt is not an imaginary doubt, and proof beyond a reasonable doubt does not mean proof beyond all imaginary doubt.⁵

Caprice — Captious. — The doubt which will warrant an acquittal is not one arising from mere caprice. By a reasonable doubt something more is meant than a captious doubt.⁶

Sympathy. — A doubt produced by undue sensibility in the mind of any juror in view of the consequences of his verdict, or a doubt born only of a merciful desire to permit the defendant to escape the penalties of the law, is not a reasonable doubt.⁷

Innocence. — A belief in the innocence of the accused is not essential in order to warrant his acquittal under the doctrine of reasonable doubt.⁸

Good Character. — The good character of the accused may give rise to a reasonable doubt of his guilt of the crime charged.¹

Conscience — Conscientious. — Proof beyond a reasonable doubt has been held to be such proof as satisfies the judgment and conscience of the jury.² But in other cases it has been held that conscientious belief was not necessarily belief beyond a reasonable doubt.³

Belief. — It has been held that an instruction undertaking to define a reasonable doubt which reduced it to a mere matter of belief was fatally erroneous.⁴

Belief as Juror and Belief as Man. — An instruction that the jurors were not at liberty to disbelieve as jurors if from the evidence they believed as men has been sustained in a number of cases.⁵ But in other cases this instruction has been held to be erroneous as relieving the jurors of their responsibility as jurymen;⁶ and a third class of authorities, while disapproving the instruction as calculated to mislead the jury, hold that it is not reversible error.⁷

"Reasonable Man" Standard — Proof that Jury Would Act upon in Own Affairs. — A reasonable doubt has been defined as one arising from a candid and impartial investigation of all the evidence, and such as in the graver transactions of life would cause a reasonable and prudent man to pause and hesitate.⁸ Proof beyond a reasonable doubt has been held to be such proof as satisfies the jurors, as reasonable men, of the guilt of the accused.⁹ Evidence has been held sufficient to remove all reasonable doubt when it is sufficient to convince the judgment of ordinarily prudent or reasonable men with such force that they would act upon that conviction without hesitation in their most important affairs or concerns of life.¹⁰ It has also been said that the conviction must be

3. Presumption of Innocence Distinguished. — A presumption of innocence is said to be a conclusion drawn by the law in favor of the citizen, by virtue whereof, when brought to trial upon a criminal charge, he must be acquitted unless he is proven to be guilty, while a reasonable doubt is defined as a condition of mind produced by the proof resulting from the evidence in the cause.³

Doubt Arising from Consideration of Part of Evidence Only. — An instruction that if the jurors have a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt, arising out of any part of the evidence, they must acquit has been held to be misleading and was properly refused. *Gordon v. 2. Conflict of Evidence. — Goddard v. People, 42 Ill. App. 487.

Where there is a plain conflict of testimony and one side or the other must be believed without qualification, there is no room for reasonable doubt, and an error defining it to the jury is immaterial. People v. Marble, 38 Mich. 117.

3. Presumption of Innocence Distinguished from Reasonable Doubt. — Coffin v. U. S., 156 U. S. 460. The court said further: "To say that the one is the equivalent of the other is therefore to say that legal evidence can be excluded from the jury, and that such exclusion may be cured by instructing them correctly in regard to the method by which they are required to reach their conclusion upon the proof actually before them. In other words, that the exclusion of an important element of proof can be justified by correctly instructing as to the proof admitted." Quoted in Cochran v. U. S., 157 U. S. 300. Texas. — King v. State, 9 Tex. App. 558;

5. Charge of Court Fully Covering Instruction Asked by Counsel. — The trial court may refuse to give an instruction on reasonable doubt at the request of counsel when it has already sufficiently covered the subject in its charge.¹

III. CIVIL ACTIONS — 1. General Rule. — A preponderance of evidence is sufficient in general to entitle a party to a verdict in a civil case. But the rule in England, followed in some jurisdictions in the United States, is that where crime is imputed in a civil case, its existence must be proved in the same manner as in a criminal prosecution — i. e., beyond a reasonable doubt.² This rule, however, is not in accord with the majority of decisions in the United States, which hold that in civil cases it is sufficient to prove a crime, like any other fact in issue, by a preponderance of evidence, discarding entirely the doctrine of reasonable doubt in civil actions.³

Case Entirely Free from Doubt. — In Mackay v. People, 2 Colo. 13, it was held that where the case was entirely free from doubt, an error in a charge as to reasonable doubt was not ground for reversal.

Indiana. — In a number of early cases the English rule was adopted. Gants v. Vinard, 1 Ind. 476; Shoulty v. Miller, 1 Ind. 544; Byrket v. Monohon, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 83, 41 Am. Dec. 212; Lanter v. McEwen, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 495; Wonderly v. Nokes, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 589; Tucker v. Call, 45 Ind. 31. But by Continental Ins. Co. v. Jachnichen, 110 Ind. 59, 59 Am. Rep. 194, the rule requiring proof by a preponderance of evidence only was established. See also Bissell v. Wert, 35 Ind. 54. In Fowler v. Wallace, 131 Ind. 347, the court, while deprecating the rule, held that justification in libel and slander must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

Iowa. — Early decisions followed the English rule. Bradley v. Kennedy, 2 Greene (Iowa) 231; Forshee v. Abrams, 2 Iowa 571; Fountain v. West, 23 Iowa 9, 92 Am. Dec. 405; *Ellis v. 3. Bastardy. — It is the general rule that in bastardy proceedings¹ the paternity of the child need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt.²

4. Usury. — It has been held that it is sufficient to sustain the defense of usury by a preponderance of evidence.³

5. Penalties. — In an action for penalties it has been held that proof beyond a reasonable doubt is necessary.⁴ But some authorities hold, to the contrary, that the principle prevailing in criminal prosecutions requiring the jury to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt has no application to civil suits for the recovery of statutory penalties.⁵

6. Fire Insurance. — Following the general rule stated above, it is held in most jurisdictions in the United States that in an action on a policy of fire insurance, the defense that the plaintiff set fire to the buildings insured need be proved by a preponderance of evidence only.⁶ But a contrary doctrine is held in England and in some jurisdictions in the United States.⁷

Reasonable Time Held to Mean as Soon as Convenient.—Murry v. Smith, 1 Hawks (8 N. Car.) 41.

Least Possible Time.—Reasonable time after an event held to be the least possible time after. Hawley v. Kenoyer, 1 Wash. Ter. 611.

When It Begins to Run.—“Reasonable time will not begin to run until some one interested in the matter calls for something to be done respecting it.” Graham v. Van Diemen's Land Co., 11 Exch. 101, 30 Eng. L. & Eq. 579, quoted in Cameron v. Wells, 30 Vt. 633.

Contracts.—Where a contract is to be performed within a reasonable time, such time must be determined according to the circumstances of the case and with particular reference to the means and ability of the person by whom the contract is to be performed. Toms v. Wilson, 32 L. J. Q. B. 382, 4 B. & S. 455, 116 E. C. L. 455; Atwood v. Emery, 26 L. J. C. Pl. 73, 1 C. B. N. S. 110, 87 E. C. L. 110; Brighty v. Norton, 32 L. J. Q. B. 38, 3 B. &

When no time is set within which a contract must be performed or a duty discharged, performance must be made within a reasonable time. What amount of time constitutes such reasonable time depends upon the facts and circumstances of the case, not upon mere opinion or expectation. 2 Chitty on Contracts (11th Am. ed.) 1062, note u; Cocker v. Franklin Hemp, etc., Mfg. Co., 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 530; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Burlingame Tp., 36 Kan. 634, 59 Am. Rep. 578; Howe v. Taggart, 133 Mass. 284; Byram v. Gordon, 11 Mich. 531; Stange v. Wilson, 17 Mich. 342 (parol evidence inadmissible to alter this implication); Abell v. Munson, 18 Mich. 306, 100 Am. Dec. 165; Youmans v. Heatt, 34 Mich. 397; Bolton v. Riddle, 35 Mich. 13; Grant v. Merchants', etc., Bank, 35 Mich. 515; Calkins v. Chandler, 36 Mich. 320; Bryant v. Saling, 4 Mo. 522; Morse v. Bellows, 7 N. H. 566; Dennis v. Stoughton, 55 Vt. 376.

Even where a covenant provides for the payment of money “immediately upon demand,” the party owing is entitled to a reasonable time to get the money and pay it over. Toms v. Wilson, 4 B. & S. 455, 116 E. C. L. 455.

In Roberts v. Mazeppa Mill Co., 30 Minn. 415, it was said that “the question of reasonable time is determined by a view of all the circumstances of the case—by placing the court and jury in the same situation as the contracting parties were at the time they made the contract; that is, by placing before them all the circumstances known to both parties at the time. Ellis v. Thompson, 3 M. & W. 445; Cocker v. Franklin Hemp, etc., Mfg. Co., 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 530. And for that purpose it has been held that evidence of the conversations of the parties may be admitted to show the circumstances under which the contract was made, and what they thought was a reasonable time. Cocker v. Franklin Hemp, etc., Mfg. Co., 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 530; Coates v. Sangston, 5 Md. 121.”

REASSIGN. — See note 1.

REASSURANCE. — See REINSURANCE.

REBATE. — To rebate is to abate or deduct from; to make a discount for from prompt payment.²

REBELLION. — “The term ‘rebellion’ is applied to an insurrection of large extent or long duration; and is usually a war between the legitimate government of a state and portions or parts of the same who seek to overthrow the government, or to dissolve their allegiance to it and to set up one of their own. The war of the ‘Great Rebellion’ in England, and of the rebellion of the southern states of the United States, may be referred to as examples under this head.”³

REBUILD. (See also RECONSTRUCT; REPAIRS. And see the title FIRE INSURANCE, vol. 13, p. 86.) — To rebuild is to build up again; to build or construct after having been demolished.⁴

REBUTTAL — REBUTTING EVIDENCE. — Rebuttal is a briefer expression for “rebutting evidence.”⁵

REBUTTER. (See also the title REJOINDERS AND SUBSEQUENT PLEADINGS, 18 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 70.) — In common-law pleading, the rebutter is the defendant’s answer to the plaintiff’s surrejoinder.

on a contract to convey land there must have been a demand of a deed and a tender of payment by the purchaser within a reasonable time. Two years was held to be unreasonable in Force v. Dutcher, 18 N. J. Eq. 401. See also the title VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Question of Law or Fact. — Whether the determination of what is reasonable time is a question of law for the court or of fact for the jury is a matter upon which there is much conflict of authority. See the subject discussed in the title QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT, ante. See also Paine v. Central Vermont R. Co., 118 U. S. 160; Wiggins v. Burkham, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 129; *Morgan v. U. 1. Reassign. — A pleading alleged that before the suit certain parties, at the request of the plaintiff and all persons interested, reconveyed and reassigned certain property which had been assigned to them in trust. It was held that the word reassign implied that the property was assigned back to the assignors, and that it would have been a breach of trust to assign to others. Parsons v. Crabb, 31 U. C. Q. B. 434.

2. Rebate. — Webst. Dict., quoted in State v. Schwarzschild, 83 Me. 265.

In Hydraulic Press Brick Co. v. McTaggart, 76 Mo. App. 354, it was held that an account filed was not rendered incorrect by the omission of a credit for a sum which would have been due under a rebate. The court said: “A debtor is not entitled to a promised rebate until he has paid or tendered the price of the thing sold. This is the true import of the term rebate, arising both from the sense given to it in the ordinary use and in the definitions of the lexicographers.”

5. Rebutting Evidence. (See also the titles EVIDENCE, vol. 11, p. 484; WITNESSES.) — The word rebutting has a twofold signification, both in common and legal parlance. It sometimes means contradictory evidence only; at other times, conclusive or overcoming testimony.” Fain v. Cornett, 25 Ga. 186.

“Rebutting Evidence is defined to be that which is given to explain, repel, counteract, or disprove facts given in evidence by the adverse party. * * * It is a general rule * * * that anything may be given as rebutting evidence which is a direct reply to that produced on the other side.” People v. Page, 1 Idaho 194; Bouv. L. Dict.

“Rebutting evidence in such cases means not merely evidence which contradicts the witnesses on the opposite side and corroborates those of the party who began, but evidence in denial of some affirmative fact which the answering party has endeavored to prove.” Marshall v. Davies, 78 N. Y. 420. See also Silverman v. Foreman, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 322.

I. NATURE OF RIGHT.—The right of recaption is a right which the law affords to a person who is wrongfully deprived of the possession of his property, of retaking possession thereof by his own act and without process of law.¹

II. EXERCISE OF RIGHT—1. Personal Property—a. STATEMENT OF RIGHT.—It may be laid down as a general rule that the owner of personal property who is entitled to the possession thereof and from whom the possession is wrongfully withheld by another may take possession thereof if he can do so without a breach of the peace.² A previous demand is not necessary.³ An officer of a corporation may exercise the right in behalf of the corporation,⁴ as may the servants or agents of an individual when the circumstances would justify the principal in so doing.⁵ One whose property has been taken from him by another may be deprived of his right to retake it by reason of the operation of the doctrine of accession, whereby its form or value has been so

Taking from Possession of Officer.—Where under process an officer has levied on the property of a person other than the debtor in the execution, the owner of the property so levied on may peaceably retake the property from the possession of the officer. changed as to deprive him of his right to the specific property.¹ For a discussion of the circumstances and conditions under which the owner will be so deprived of his property, reference should be made to another part of this work.² On the other hand, one wrongfully mingling the goods of another with his own may under some circumstances confer on the owner of the goods so commingled a title to and right to take possession of the whole mass. A full discussion of the circumstances under which such right may arise will be found under another title in this work.³ Where the goods wrongfully commingled are capable of identification by the owner he may, of course, retake possession thereof peaceably.⁴ So, too, where the goods intermixed are of equal value, he may retake his aliquot part of the whole.⁵

When Right Conferred by Contract. — When a chattel mortgage authorizes the mortgagee to take possession of the mortgaged property in case of default, the mortgagee may take possession peaceably, but is not justified in resorting to force or violence.⁶ The rights of a vendor to retake possession under the terms of a conditional sale of personal property have been fully treated elsewhere.⁷

b. DEGREE OF FORCE WHICH MAY BE USED. — The owner of property possession of which is unlawfully withheld will not be justified in committing an assault and battery on the person in possession;⁸ but he may use such force as is necessary to retake the property⁹ without incurring any civil liability therefor,¹⁰ though he may be held liable for injuries resulting from the use of unnecessary force.¹¹ Even though the manner of retaking constitutes a breach of the peace, such fact does not subject the owner to a restoration of the property to the person from whom he has taken it,¹² though he may be answerable criminally.¹³

Manner in Which Wrongful Possession Acquired. — In some jurisdictions the right of the owner entitled to possession to use such force as is necessary to retake is limited to those instances where the possession of the person from whom the owner seeks to retake possession was acquired wrongfully by force or fraud.¹⁴ Where property has been feloniously taken the owner can, as a general rule, if he immediately pursue the wrongful taker, exercise the same degree of force for the recaption of his property as he would have been authorized to exercise in defending his possession. In the latter case he can exercise such reasonable force as the exigency of the occasion requires to effect the retaking.¹

Conflicting Claims of Title. — Where there is a contest over the title to property and one of the claimants gets actual possession peaceably, the other cannot retake it by violence. He may interfere if the property is taken in his view, but he must stop short of a breach of the peace, and cannot commit an assault and battery over and above molliter manus imponere.²

c. RIGHT TO ENTER ON PREMISES. — The mere fact that one has personal property within the inclosure of another does not authorize him to enter the inclosure for the purpose of taking such property into his possession.³ But if a person wrongfully takes the goods of another and places them on his own land⁴ or on the land of a third person with the latter's consent,⁵ the owner of the goods can enter upon such land for the purpose of retaking possession of the property, and is not liable in trespass for the necessary damage occasioned by so doing. An owner of chattels who has placed them on another's land has no right to enter on such other's land against his will for the purpose of taking away his property, and the owner of the land can use such force as is necessary to repel the invasion of his premises,⁶ or he can recover as for a trespass.⁷ So if chattels are deposited on the land of one who is not a participant in the wrongful taking of them from the owner, without the consent of the landowner, the owner of the chattels cannot without permission of the landowner enter upon the latter's land to retake his chattels except in case of theft and fresh pursuit.⁸ The right of a purchaser of personal property situated on the land of the vendor to enter thereon for the purpose of taking possession of the purchased property, as well as the right of the vendor under a contract of conditional sale to enter on the land of the purchaser to retake possession after default, has been treated under other titles in this work.⁹

Permission to do so is not implied from the existence of that relation alone. McLeod v. Jones, 105 Mass. 403, 7 Am. Rep. 439. Slaves. — In Collomb v. Taylor, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 689, the court, recognizing the right of the owner of property which had been wrongfully taken from him to enter without breach of the peace upon the premises of the wrongful taker for the purpose of retaking it, held that with reference to slaves such right of entry should, in the interests of the public peace, be denied to the owner, since, because of the nature of the property involved, the exercise of such right would necessarily tend to a violation of the public peace.

Where one purchases property situated on the premises of another, under such circumstances as to imply a license from the vendor to the purchaser to enter upon the premises and take away the purchased property, the purchaser has a right to enter within a reasonable time thereafter and take away his property, and is not guilty of trespass for so doing, even though he forcibly breaks into the premises of the vendor, provided that in so doing he does no more injury than is reasonably necessary to obtain and carry away the property; and the fact that the vendor has prohibited the taking of the property is immaterial.¹ The purchaser is not, however, justified in committing an assault or a breach of the peace.²

2. Real Property.—In analogy to the right of recaption as applied to personal property, an owner of real estate who is entitled to the possession thereof and from whom the possession is wrongfully withheld may, if he can do so peaceably and without a breach of the peace, take possession thereof without process of law.³ The owner may use such force as is reasonably necessary to expel the person in possession without incurring any civil liability, though he may be held liable in a criminal prosecution for an assault and battery or for a breach of the peace,⁴ or under the statutes prohibiting forcible entries.⁵ He is, of course, liable in a civil action for injuries resulting from any unnecessary force or violence.⁶ One rightfully in possession of premises can recover damages for a forcible eviction therefrom by the owner;⁷ but mere physical possession of premises by a person is not alone sufficient to justify him in using force or violence to prevent the entry of the lawful occupant or to evict him after entry.⁸

I. SCOPE OF TITLE. — This title will be confined to the treatment of receipts for money paid. A full treatment of other varieties of receipts and acknowledgments in the nature of receipts will be found under appropriate titles in other parts of this work.¹

II. DEFINITION AND NATURE — In General. — A receipt has been defined as "a written acknowledgment of payment of money or delivery of chattels."² It is merely the admission of the party giving it that money or something else has been received by him.³

2. Bouv. L. Dict.

Other Definitions. — "A receipt is the written acknowledgment of the receipt of money, or a thing of value, without containing any affirmative obligation upon either party to it — a mere admission of a fact, in writing; but when a receipt contains stipulations which amount to a contract, it becomes a contract, and must be governed by the law of contracts, and can be avoided only by fraud, mistake, failure of consideration, rescission, or some way known to the law." Krutz v. Craig, 53 Ind. 561.

"A receipt may be defined to be such a written acknowledgment by one person of his having received money from another as will be prima facie evidence of that fact in a court of law." Kegg v. State, 10 Ohio 75.

Alabama. — Strange v. Watson, 11 Ala. 334.

Is Not Contract. — A simple receipt is not a contract, but is merely evidence of the performance in whole or in part of a contract.¹ A receipt may, however, contain stipulations which amount to a contract, and it then becomes a contract governed by the law of contracts.² So far as it partakes of the character of a mere receipt it may be varied and controlled by parol evidence, but in other respects it stands like any other written contract, and cannot be so contradicted.³

Presumption that Payment Was Made in Money.

— A receipt reciting that a designated debt has been paid raises a presumption that it was paid in money; hence, a forgery of a writing reciting that the person whose name purported to be signed had "received of J. D. his book account in full" was held, in State v. Dalton, 1 Hawks (8 N. Car.) 3, to be an offense within the purview of a statute prohibiting the forgery of a "receipt for money." See also the title FORGERY, vol. 13, p. 1097.

Acknowledgment of Payment. — A memorandum importing that A B has paid a sum to C D, but not importing any acknowledgment from C D of his having received it, is not such a receipt as the statute makes it an offense to forge or utter. Rex v. Harvey, R. & R. C. C. 227.

Receipt Implied by Use of Word "Settled" with Signature. — In Rex v. Martin, 7 C. & P. 549, 32 E. C. L. 626, it was held that the words "Settled — Samuel Hughes," at the foot of a bill of parcels imported a receipt and acquittance, and that in an indictment for forging the acquittance, it was sufficient to set out the bill of parcels with the word "settled" and the supposed signature at the foot of it, without any averment that the word "settled" imported a receipt or acquittance.

1. Receipt Not Contract. — Brannan v. Mesick, 10 Cal. 95; Annan v. Merritt, 13 Conn. 478; Pauley v. Weisart, 59 Ind. 241; Sherry v. Picken, 10 Ind. 375; Hildreth v. O'Brien, 10 Allen (Mass.) 104. See also Winn v. Chamberlin, 32 Vt. 318.

The Indorsement of a Payment upon a Note, whether of interest or principal, in itself constitutes, when made upon the note, no part thereof. It is a mere admission or evidence of payment, and stands upon the same ground as a receipt for the sum received, executed by the holder to the maker of the note. Gilpatrick v. Foster, 12 Ill. 355. Sears v. Wempner, 27 Minn. 351; Kegg v. State, 10 Ohio 75; McDaniels v. Lapham, 21 Vt. 222. See also the title PAYMENT, vol. 22, p. 584.

An Entry on the Margin of the Record of a Mortgage, acknowledging payment of the debt and discharging the mortgage, is, as regards the acknowledgment of payment, a mere receipt explainable by parol evidence, and does not bar a recovery of the unpaid balance of the debt. Thompson v. Avery, 11 Utah 214.

A Certificate Issued by a Bank stating that a certain person has deposited a certain sum of money, but containing no promise on the part of the bank in regard thereto, is of the same force and effect as a receipt for money. The word "certify" gives no additional force to the instrument as purporting a contract. Hotchkiss v. Mosher, 48 N. Y. 478.

Effect of Receipt and Release Distinguished. — A release is a contract which, when under seal, conclusively implies a consideration and ipso facto discharges the cause of action. It cannot be contradicted or explained by parol evidence so long as it remains in force. A receipt not under seal, on the other hand, is only an admission of a payment; it is merely prima facie evidence of the fact which it purports to recite, and may be rebutted by parol or other evidence.¹ Neither will be given effect if obtained unfairly or by improper influences.² To have effect as a release an instrument must by its terms purport to be a release and extinguishment of the liability of the person to whom it is given. If it is such in form and is under seal a consideration will be implied;³ if not under seal a consideration must be proven.⁴

Joint Debtors. — A technical release under seal given by a creditor to one of several joint or joint and several debtors operates as a discharge of all, but a receipt for a payment less than the whole debt, given to one of the joint debtors, though expressed to be in full of all demands does not so operate,⁵ since it is without consideration.⁶

Receipt under Seal. — An acknowledgment of the payment of a specified sum of money, under seal, is of the same effect as a receipt not under seal, but no greater.⁷

Effect of Acknowledgment Before Notary. — The fact that a receipt is acknowledged before a notary imparts to it no additional weight.⁸

III. DEBTOR'S RIGHT TO RECEIPT — Statutory Provision. — In at least one jurisdiction the statutes provide that a debtor has a right to require from his creditor a written receipt for any property delivered in performance of his obligation.⁹ The only method which the debtor has for the enforcement of the right so conferred appears to be his right to annex a demand for a receipt to a tender, without invalidating the tender.¹⁰ In some instances the statutes make it the duty of a public officer to give a receipt for moneys paid to him in his official capacity: In such case the performance of the duty may be enforced by mandamus.¹¹

IV. RECEIPTS AS EVIDENCE — 1. Admissibility — a. IN GENERAL. — A receipt, being the admission of the party signing it, is held to be admissible in evidence in favor of the party to whom it was given and against the party giving it, in accordance with the general principle that the admissions and declarations of a party may be used against him.¹

Foundation for Admission. — The necessity of proving the execution of the receipt by the person against whom it is offered, as a prerequisite to its acceptance as evidence, is treated elsewhere in this work.²

Receipt Purporting to Be Signed by Agent. — A receipt signed by one purporting to be an agent of the creditor is not admissible against the creditor without proof of the agent's authority to make it, or subsequent ratification. The subsequent acceptance of the money from one assuming to act as agent, but without authority to do so, will constitute a ratification of the receipt as an admission of the amount received, but not a recital as to its being in full.³

Delivery of Receipt. — A receipt in the possession of the party by whom it purports to have been signed is not evidence of the payment recited when it does not appear ever to have been delivered to the party claiming to have made the payment.⁴

Alteration of Receipt. — If a receipt is altered by the party holding it or by procurement of such party, it is vitiated as an instrument of evidence; but the rule is otherwise if the alteration is made by a stranger.⁵ Alterations appearing on its face will, however, be prima facie presumed to have been made before execution.⁶ The whole inquiry whether there has been an alteration, and if so, whether in fraud of the defending party or otherwise, is to be determined by the jury from an inspection of the receipt itself and the other evidence in the case; hence such a receipt, the signature of the receiptor being proven, should be admitted for the consideration of the jury.⁷

Construction of Receipt. — In determining what claims are referred to by a receipt which has been given in evidence, the language of the receipt, in the absence of other evidence, is to be construed so as to give effect to its plain and obvious meaning.⁸

b. AS EVIDENCE OF COLLATERAL FACTS. — While a receipt primarily

2. See the title EXECUTION AND PROOF OF DOCUMENTS, vol. II, p. 584 et seq.

Where a party relies upon a receipt as evidence of payment, the genuineness of the receipt must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence before it constitutes any evidence of payment. Salazar v. Taylor, 18 Colo. 538; Neil v. Miller, 2 Root (Conn.) 117.

An instrument in writing delivered by an illiterate creditor to his debtor, purporting to be an acknowledgment of the payment of a certain sum of money, though necessarily not in his writing or signed by him, is admissible, in connection with evidence of its delivery, as tending to prove payment. Mousseau v. Mousseau, 42 Minn. 212.

Conclusive Presumption in Favor of Execution of Ancient Receipts. — There is a conclusive presumption in favor of the due execution of ancient receipts, and it has been held that when such receipts are thirty years old the mere production is sufficient, and other proof of their execution will not be required. Bertie v. Beaumont, 2 Price 303; Settle v. Alison, 8 Ga. 206, 52 Am. Dec. 393. See also McReynolds v. Longenberger, 57 Pa. St. 13, and see the title ANCIENT DOCUMENTS, vol. 2, p. 324.

Receipts in Deeds — What Proof Necessary. — A receipt for purchase money at the foot of a deed is evidence without further proof of its execution than the acknowledgment of the deed. Kelly v. Dunlap, 3 P. & W. (Pa.) 136. See also the title ACKNOWLEDGMENTS, vol. I, p. 484.

8. Construction of Receipt. — Haydel v. Rousel, 1 La. Ann. 35.

Receipt in Full to Principal Discharges Surety. — Brown v. Ayer, 24 Ga. 288.

Instruments Construed as Receipts in Full. — In the absence of any proof to the contrary, an instrument reading, "Received from N. one hundred dollars commission on purchase of mill," duly signed, has been held to be a receipt in full. Elting v. Sturtevant, 41 Conn. 176.

operates as proof of the facts stated therein, yet it is often used as evidence of collateral facts. Being prima facie evidence of payment, a receipt is admissible to support whatever inference may be drawn from the fact of the payment described.¹ So too the recitals of the receipt may be admissible against the party issuing it, as constituting admissions of facts in controversy.²

c. AS EVIDENCE AGAINST STRANGERS. — While a receipt acknowledging payment is evidence of such payment as against the maker thereof, it is usually held that as against strangers to the transaction a receipt is incompetent evidence of such fact.³ In such cases the giver of the receipt⁴ or some person who can testify of his own knowledge to the fact of payment⁵ should be called as a witness to prove such fact; for as against such strangers, such receipt is but the hearsay declaration of the party who signed it, made without opportunity for his cross-examination, and independently of the sanction of his oath.⁶

Exceptions to Rule. — There are cases, however, where a receipt by a third party may be competent evidence, as, for instance, when the person to whom the payment is made is pointed out by law, and such person is required by law to give a receipt; as in the case of the payment of taxes to a public officer,⁷ or where the person to whom the payment is to be made is designated

1. Receipt for Rent — Presumption of Payment of Previous Rent. — The law presumes that previous rent has been paid where a receipt for subsequent rent is given, unless the contrary is made to appear. *Jenkins v. 2. Receipt in Name of Corporation as Evidence that Corporation Was Doing Business. — A receipt issued in the name of the defendant corporation, and signed in its name by a party who owned all the stock, is admissible to prove the plaintiff's claim that the defendant was doing business as a corporation at the time when the receipt was signed, where the defendant claims that it was not then doing business. Orr Water Ditch Co. v. Reno Water Co., 19 Nev. 60. See also the title ADMISSIONS, vol. 1, p. 670.

Attorney's Receipt for Note as Evidence of Genuineness of Such Note. — The receipt of an attorney at law acknowledging that he has received a note for collection, in an action against him for negligence in not collecting the note, is prima facie evidence of the genuineness and justness of the note described in the receipt. Hair v. Glover, 14 Ala. 500. See also the title ATTORNEY AND CLIENT, vol. 3, p. 391.

Time of Payment. — As against the receptor or those claiming as his representatives, the date of a receipt is prima facie evidence of the time of making the payment which they acknowledge. Baylis v. Stanton, 2 Dorion (Quebec) 350.

A receipt by the payee of a claim is not evidence of payment as against the assignee of the claim unless it is proven to have been made and delivered prior to the assignment, since the declarations against the interest of the assignor subsequent to his parting with the title are inadmissible against his assignee. Foster v. Beals, 21 N. Y. 247; Morton v. Morton, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 107. See also the title ADMISSIONS, vol. 1, p. 685.

In an action by an assignee against a debtor the latter introduced a receipt as evidence of a payment prior to the assignment. It was held that there was no presumption that the date of the receipt was the true date, and that the burden of showing that it was made and delivered before the assignment was upon the debtor. Wilcox v. Pearman, 9 Leigh (Va.) 144. But see Fennerstein's Champagne, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 145; Locke v. Porter Gold, etc., Min. Co., 41 Cal. 305; Sherman v. Crosby, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 70.

Receipts Given by Decedent in Course of Business. — It has been held that a receipt given by a person deceased at the time it is offered in evidence is admissible against a third person for the purpose of proving not only the fact of payment, but, where such fact is recited in the receipt, the person from whom the decedent received such payment.²

Receipts Taken by Fiduciaries. — So, too, it would appear that receipts taken by a guardian or executor for money paid out by him in the administration of the affairs of the estate which he represents are prima facie evidence of such payments in an accounting by him, as against other creditors or distributees of the estate.³

2. Other Proof Not Precluded by Taking Receipt — In General. — A receipt, though evidence of payment, is not the only evidence, and when the fact can be established without it, is not necessary.⁴ It is not better evidence of the payment than parol evidence within the sense of the rule requiring that the best evidence shall be adduced, and hence the fact that a receipt has been taken will not preclude other evidence of payment, though the failure to produce the receipt is not explained.⁵ Where, however, the receipt is relied Tax Collector's Receipt as Evidence of Validity of Taxes Paid. — While a tax collector's receipt may be evidence of the payment of the taxes designated, it is not, of course, sufficient proof of the validity of the taxes paid. Seale v. Doane, 17 Cal. 476.

Receipt of Receiver of Land Office as Evidence of Payments to Him. — Goodwin v. McCabe, 75 Cal. 584; Cluggage v. Swan, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 150, 5 Am. Dec. 400.

Time of Giving Receipt as Affecting Admissibility. — It seems, however, that such a receipt, to be admissible, must have been given at or about the time the payment it purports to acknowledge was made, and must have been given in the usual course of business. Cluggage v. Swan, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 150, 5 Am. Dec. 400.

Sheriff's Receipt to Debtor of Execution Debtor. — Kibbee v. Howard, 7 Wis. 150.

Receipts of De Facto Officer. — The receipts for public money of a county treasurer, given to a tax collector after the expiration of his term, but before he has delivered possession of the office to his successor, are prima facie evidence of the receipt of such money by him in his official capacity, in an action to charge the sureties on his official bond. Placer County v. Dickerson, 45 Cal. 12.

2. Receipts Given by Decedent in Course of Business. — Harrison v. Harrison, 9 Ala. 73; Upson v. Raiford, 29 Ala. 188; Field v. Boynton, 33 Ga. 239. See also Newell v. Roberts, 13 Conn. 63; Wooten v. Nall, 18 Ga. 609; Taylor v. Gould, 57 Pa. St. 152.

Their admissibility seems to be based on the theory that they are declarations against interest made in the usual and ordinary course of business. Harrison v. Harrison, 9 Ala. 73. But see Wooten v. Nall, 18 Ga. 609; and see the title PAYMENT, vol. 22, p. 580.

Where Receipt Contains Contract. — Of course, where the receipt contains the terms of a contract, the writing is the best evidence of the contract and is within the rule requiring the production of the writing or the laying of a proper foundation for secondary evidence of its contents. Smith v. Brown, 3 Hawks (10 N. Car.) 580; Wilson v. Derr, 69 N. Car. 137. See also the title SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

Payment of Taxes May Be Proved by Parol whether a receipt was taken for it at the time or not. Elston v. Kennicott, 52 Ill. 272; Hinchman v. Whetstone, 23 Ill. 185; Hammond v. Hannin, 21 Mich. 374, 4 Am. Rep. 490. But it has been held that charges in an administration account for the payment of on as evidence of the fact of payment, it must be produced or its absence must be satisfactorily accounted for as a foundation for secondary evidence as to the contents of such receipt.¹

3. Effect of Receipts as Evidence — a. CONCLUSIVENESS OF RECEIPTS —

(1) Prima Facie Evidence but Not Conclusive — In General. — A receipt is merely evidence, and while it is of the highest and most satisfactory character,² and of greater probative effect than most other evidence,³ it is nevertheless not conclusive, but is merely prima facie evidence of the facts recited by it,⁴ and is taxes by the administrator cannot be proved by the testimony of witnesses, but must be proved by the receipt of the collector. Hall v. Hall, 1 Mass. 101.

Proof of the Loss of Receipts Without Proof of Their Genuineness was held in Reynolds v. Jourdan, 6 Cal. 108, not to be a sufficient predicate for the admission of evidence as to their contents. Compare Spears v. Chrisman, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 47.

Receipt as Evidence of Collateral Facts. — On an issue as to whether or not the defendant and another were jointly interested in a particular business enterprise, parol evidence that the witness has seen the defendant sign receipts in the name of both parties alleged to be jointly interested is inadmissible. The receipt itself ought to be produced. Romayne v. Duane, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 246.

Where Receipt Contains Contract. — "Where a writing in the form of a receipt is the mere acknowledgment of the payment of money, or the delivery of a thing, it is but prima facie evidence of the fact; but if it also contains a contract to do something in relation to the thing delivered, in so far as it is evidence of that contract between the parties, it stands on the footing of all other contracts in writing, and cannot be contradicted or varied by parol; except, perhaps, that at law the same circumstances of fraud, mistake, or surprise may be shown to set it aside as might be shown in equity to relieve from a contract." Dale v. Evans, 14 Ind. 288. See to the same effect Coon v. Knap, 8 N. Y. 402, 59 Am. Dec. 502. And see the titles EVIDENCE, vol. 11, p. 548; PAROL EVIDENCE, vol. 21, p. 1078.

Acknowledgment of Receipt of Consideration in Deed. — A receipt in a deed acknowledging the payment of the consideration is only open to explanation or contradiction¹ by parol,² or by any other competent evidence.³ Where the receipt is embodied in a contract, this rule does not apply so as to permit the recital of the payment of the consideration to be contradicted for the purpose of showing that the contract has not become operative.⁴

Fraud, Mistake, Undue Influence, Etc. — It may be stated as a universal rule that such circumstances as would lead a court of equity to set aside a contract prima facie evidence of such payment, and may be contradicted or explained by parol evidence. Higdon v. Thomas, 1 Har. & G. (Md.) 139; Wolfe v. Hauver, 1 Gill (Md.) 90; O'Neale v. Lodge, 3 Har. & M. (Md.) 433; 1 Am. Dec. 377; Spalding v. Brent, 3 Md. Ch. 411; Elysville Mfg. Co. v. Okisko Co., 1 Md. Ch. 392. See also Carr v. Hobbs, 11 Md. 285; *Watson v. Recital as to Application of Money Paid. — The recitals of a receipt as to the claim on which the money paid is intended by the parties to be applied are prima facie evidence that the payment was made on the claim named, and the burden of proving the contrary is on the persons disputing such fact. Snodgrass v. Parks, 79 Cal. 55; U. S. v. Jones, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 399.

Recital as to Person Making Payment. — Gulick v. Conover, 15 N. J. L. 420.

Recital as to Purpose of Deposit. — One accepting a receipt for money deposited with a bank is not precluded thereby from showing by other evidence that the money was accepted by the bank for a purpose other than that stated in the receipt. Ellicott v. Barnes, 31 Kan. 170.

may be shown at law to destroy the effect of a receipt;¹ and in accordance with this rule the party disputing a receipt may always show that it was given under a mistake as to the facts,² or in ignorance of material facts,³ or in ignorance of the legal rights surrendered thereby.⁴ So too the prima facie evidentiary value of a receipt may be overcome by showing that it was procured by fraud,⁵ duress,⁶ or undue influence,⁷ and that its recitals are not true, or that it was without consideration,⁸ or that it has been rescinded by agreement.⁹

When Unexplained. — In accordance with the rule that in the absence of rebutting proof prima facie evidence establishes that which it tends to prove,¹⁰ a receipt remaining uncontradicted and unexplained is conclusive evidence of what it contains,¹ and cannot be ignored.²

Necessity for Convincing Evidence in Contradiction or Explanation. — It has been frequently said by the courts that in order to overcome the prima facie probative effect of a receipt, the evidence must be clear and convincing, and must not rest on mere impressions.³ There is not, however, any rule in respect to receipts different from that applicable to any other prima facie evidence. To destroy its effect it must be overbalanced by other evidence laid before the jury, which is to judge whether there is such a preponderance. No rule can be laid down as to either the kind or quantity of evidence which ought to outweigh the receipt.⁴

Burden of Proof. — Where a receipt is properly introduced in evidence, the burden of proof to contradict or explain such receipt rests upon the party disputing it.⁵

Rule Where Evidence of Equal Weight. — Where the evidence supporting and that impeaching a receipt are balanced, the receipt must have its prima facie effect.⁶

(2) Questions for Jury — Genuineness of Receipt. — It is for the jury to determine whether or not a receipt offered in evidence is the genuine receipt of the person by whom it purports to have been executed.¹ Likewise it is the function of the jury to determine from the evidence what was the purpose, intention, and understanding of the parties in giving and accepting the receipt, and to give it effect in accordance therewith.²

Where a Mistake Is Alleged. — The jurors must judge whether the evidence submitted is sufficient to satisfy them of the mistake in the receipt, in which case they may correct it according to the truth; otherwise they must take it to be true.³

The Questions What an Attempted Explanation Does Prove, and whether the party disputing a receipt has successfully carried the burden of so explaining or contradicting it as to overcome its force, are for the jury and not for the court.⁴

b. RECEIPTS IN FULL — Prima Facie Defense. — It may be stated as a general rule that a receipt in full of all demands is of itself prima facie evidence of a mutual settlement and satisfaction of all demands between the parties,⁵ and

Effect on Note Not Due at Time of Giving. — A receipt in full of all demands to date is prima facie evidence of the payment of a note owed to the receptor by the person to whom casts upon the opposite party the burden of explaining it or in some way destroying its effect as evidence.¹ Like other receipts it is subject to explanation or contradiction by extraneous evidence.² If, however, a receipt in full contains anything in the nature of an agreement, upon the compromise or the receipt is given, though the note was not due at the time of giving the receipt. Cash v. Freeman, 35 Me. 483.

Where Payment is Made by a Check Which Recites on Its Face "In Full of All Demands," such words will constitute a receipt in full, as against the payee, only when it is shown that he had knowledge of the presence of such words, or when facts are shown which in law would charge him with such knowledge. Rapp v. Giddings, 4 S. Dak. 492.

Ignorance of Fact. — A receipt reciting a payment "in full settlement of all demands of every kind and nature" does not discharge the debtor from liability for goods sold and delivered to him by the creditor which neither of the parties, at the time the receipt was given, knew had been delivered. Bloomington Min. Co. v. Brooklyn Hygienic Ice Co., 58 N. Y. App. Div. 66.

Consideration. — Although a receipt in full is given with knowledge, and there is no error, fraud, or mistake, yet if there is sufficient proof that no consideration was given, the receipt will not sustain the defense of payment. Kenny v. Kane, 50 N. J. L. 562.

It Was Held by an Early English Decision that a receipt in full of all demands, when given with complete knowledge of all the circumstances, is a conclusive bar to an action, and that the party giving it should not be allowed to rip up the transaction so closed and concluded. Bristow v. Eastman, 1 Esp. 172, criticised in Bennett v. Murray, 5 Nova Scotia 614. See also Alner v. George, 1 Campb. 393.

In Connecticut the rule is well settled that a receipt in full will operate like a discharge to defeat any further claim by the party giving it, unless it is given under such circumstances of mistake, accident, or surprise, or is procured by such fraud, as will authorize a court of equity to set it aside, and that such facts may be given in evidence in a court of law to settlement of disputed claims, that one of the parties shall accept and receive from the other a certain sum in satisfaction and discharge of a claim, then the paper signed becomes and is a contract between them and must be treated as such; it cannot be varied or contradicted by parol, but is binding and conclusive upon the parties in the absence of fraud or mistake.¹

Receipt in Full as Evidence of Accord and Satisfaction. — The payment by a debtor, where the debt is liquidated and undisputed, of a sum less than that due, even though the creditor has agreed to accept such sum in satisfaction of the whole claim, is not a conclusive bar to the recovery of the unpaid balance; hence a receipt in full when the whole amount has not been paid is not conclusive, but, as hereinbefore stated, is merely prima facie evidence of the payment of the debt.² If the claim is unliquidated and disputed, it is competent for the parties to agree on a sum which shall be paid on the one hand and accepted on the other in settlement of the claim.³ Obviously, where a receipt in full is given in pursuance of such an agreement and with knowledge of all the circumstances, it is, in the absence of fraud or mistake, a conclusive settlement of the claim, not because the receipt as such is conclusive, but because the whole transaction constitutes an accord and satisfaction of which the receipt is evidence.⁴ So where one gives a receipt in full of all demands, knowing that the debtor claims the amount paid to be all that is due, it amounts to an accord and satisfaction.⁵ And where the receptor knows that a tender of a sum is made on condition that it shall be accepted as full payment, the signing and delivery of the receipt is an acceptance by him of the condition.⁶

c. RECEIPTS IN CONTRACTS. — The effect of recitals in contracts acknowledging the payment of the consideration thereof is treated elsewhere in this work.⁷

V. QUESTION OF RECEIPTS AS ESTOPPEL. — A receipt may, when acted upon by third parties without knowledge of the facts, and to their prejudice, estop the party who gave it from denying its purport.⁸ But as against third per-destroy its evidentiary value. Fuller v. Crittenden, 9 Conn. 401, 23 Am. Dec. 364; Hurd v. Blackman, 19 Conn. 177; Bonnell v. Chamberlin, 26 Conn. 487; Tucker v. Baldwin, 13 Conn. 136, 33 Am. Dec. 384. See also Beam v. Barnum, 21 Conn. 200; Kane v. Morehouse, 46 Conn. 300.

Such receipt in full will discharge the whole debt though given for a payment that was in itself but a part of the entire debt. Aborn v. Rathbone, 54 Conn. 444.

Colorado. — A receipt executed with a full knowledge of all the circumstances, and without mistake or surprise on the one part or fraud or imposition on the other, is a good defense to the claim. Guldager v. Rockwell, 14 Colo. 459.

Same — Receive Bid. — A resolution of a county board of supervisors accepted the plans of an architect for a jail, upon condition that it should receive a bid from a reliable party who would give sufficient bonds to erect the jail in conformity with the plans for a specified sum. It was held that the word receive, in this connection, was not equivalent to "accept," and that the condition was satisfied if the board found a reliable party who was willing to give the bond and do the work, although it refused his bid. Hall v. Los Angeles County, 74 Cal. 502.

Approved. — In Mixon v. Clevenger, 74 Miss. 73, it was held that the entry of an order by the board of supervisors that the real-estate assessment roll for a certain year should "be received as corrected" sufficiently showed an approval of the roll by the board. The court said: "The word received, as here used, cannot have its primary significance, for the former order of the board shows that the roll had already passed into its custody, that it had accepted it from the assessor and taken it up for examination, as required by law." See also Grayson v. Richardson, 65 Miss. 222, set out under APPROVE — APPROVER — APPROVE-MENT, vol. 2, p. 521, note.

Bought. — See Schultz v. Coon, 51 Wis. 418, 37 Am. Rep. 839; stated under BOUGHT, vol. 4, p. 750, note, and see generally the title RECEIPTS, ante.

Charging. — See Hallenback v. Getz, 63 Conn. 385, stated under the title PAWN AND PAWN-BROKER, vol. 22, p. 509.

Authority to Indorse Not Implied from Authority to Receive. — See the title AGENCY, vol. 1, p. 1030.

Receiving Cotton. — In Reese v. State, 73 Ala. 18, it was held that an agent of a mortgagee who received seed cotton, conveyed by the mortgage, from the mortgagor for his principal after the hour of sunset and before sunrise was guilty under the provisions of the statute making it a misdemeanor to buy, sell, receive, barter, or dispose of any cotton within those hours.

Fraudulent Conveyances. (See also the title FRAUDULENT SALES AND CONVEYANCES, vol. 14, p. 210.) — The term received, as used in a statute against fraudulent conveyances which was worded as follows: "Any one suspected of having fraudulently received," etc., "any of the money, goods, effects, or other estate," etc., was held to apply to the obtaining of real estate as well as personal property. Harlow v. Tufts, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 453.

Receive and Have. — See HAVE, HAVING, ETC., vol. 15, p. 287.

Received Payment. (See the titles BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES, vol. 4, p. 65; PAYMENT, vol. 22, p. 513; RECEIPTS, ante; TENDER.) — Where the payee of a note, before acceptance of notice or its dishonor, indorsed it "received payment," it was held that there was no presumption that the note had been paid. Flint First Nat. Bank v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 543.

Receiving and Paying Money. — By statute a sheriff was entitled to certain fees for "receiving and paying money" to an execution plaintiff. It was held that the sheriff was not entitled to a commission where no sale was made or money paid upon the writ, but the plaintiff satisfied the judgment upon the delivery to him of security for the debt, interest, and costs in full. Irvin v. Jones, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. 97, 3 Pa. Dist. 782.

Received into Record. (See also the title RECORDS.) — In Pawlet v. Sandgate, 17 Vt. 619, it was held that an indorsement upon a paper that it had been received into record was not a compliance with a statute which required it to be recorded; the record must be made by actually transcribing the paper into a book kept for that purpose.

Received and Remitted. — See Holmes v. Gayle, 1 Ala. 520.

Receive and Retain Distinguished. — In Swann v. Josselyn, 14 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 115, it was said: "To receive is not to retain, but it implies payment by some other person. The word 'retain' has a very different meaning, to wit, to hold that which one already has."

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEY. — See note 1.

Receive and Sale Distinguished. — A statute made it a misdemeanor to sell to, buy from, or receive from a slave any article or commodity, etc. In construing this statute the court said: "The word receive, we apprehend, was inserted to obviate the difficulty of proving, in many cases, an actual sale. It is much more comprehensive than the word 'sale.' Its meaning, in this section, is 'to take, as a thing offered; to accept.'" Shuttleworth v. State, 35 Ala. 417.

Shipped. — Where a charter-party provided that the bills of lading should be conclusive evidence of the amount of cargo received, the word received was held to mean "shipped on board." Lishman v. Christie, 19 Q. B. D. 333, which, as nearly as possible, overrules Pyman v. Burt, 1 Cab. & El. 207.

Receiving — Taking — Having. — The word receiving in a bequest "in trust for the benefit of said L. during her life, receiving her annual interest and income therefrom, the said share to be securely invested as soon as declared, and after her death to be equally divided between her children," was held to mean nothing more than "taking" or "having." Baker v. Keiser, 75 Md 339.

Receive and Take — Statute of Anne. (See also the title JOINT TENANTS AND TENANTS IN COMMON, vol. 17, p. 688.) — The statute of 4 Anne, c. 16, § 27, provides that "actions of account shall and may be brought and maintained * * * by one joint tenant and tenant in common * * * against the other, as bailiff for receiving more than comes to his just share or proportion," etc. In holding that this statute did not authorize a recovery by the out-tenant against the tenant in possession for the value of the mere use and occupation of the joint estate, the court, in Henderson v. Eason, 17 Q. B. 718, 79 E. C. L. 719, said: "Every case in which a tenant in common receives more than his share is within the statute, and account will lie when he does receive, but not otherwise. It is to be observed also that the receipt of issues and profits is not mentioned, but simply the receipt of more than comes to his share; and, further, he is to account when he receives, not takes, more than comes to his just share." But see Shiels v. Stark, 14 Ga. 435; West v. Weyer, 46 Ohio St. 66; Thompson v. Bostick, McMull. Eq. (S. Car.) 75; Hayden v. Merrill, 44 Vt. 348.

And in Early v. Friend, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 47, it was said: "With all deference to the Court of Exchequer Chamber, I think the construction they put upon the word receiving is too technical and narrow, at least for our own country. * * * I do not see the force of the distinction drawn by that court between the words receive and 'take' in this connection. I think the word receiving, in the statute, literally means a receiving of profits as well by use and occupation as by renting out the property."

Receiving Will — Louisiana Code. — Article 1578 of the Civil Code of Louisiana requires a nuncupative testament by public act to be received by a notary public in the presence of three witnesses. It was contended by counsel that the word received, employed in the article, meant that the notary must in the presence of the requisite number of witnesses complete the entire testament, including the signing by testator, notary, and witnesses, but the court held that the word meant the dictation of the will in the presence of the witnesses, and the reading of it to the testator and the witnesses in the presence of each other. Saux's Succession, 46 La. Ann. 1426. See also Langley v. Langley, 12 La. 114, and see the title WILLS.

1. Receiver of Public Money. — In U. S. v. Lee, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 462, it was held that a public officer who received money in advance for the contingencies of his office was a receiver of public money, within the meaning of Act Cong. March 3, 1797.

I. DEFINITION — 1. In General. — A receiver is an officer of the court through whom the court, by virtue of its jurisdiction, equitable or statutory, takes possession of property which is the subject of a suit, preserves it from waste or destruction, secures and collects the proceeds, and ultimately disposes of them according to the rights of those entitled thereto, whether they are regular parties in the cause or only come before the court in a seasonable time and in the due course of proceeding to assert and establish their pretensions.¹

2. Distinguished from Court Depositaries. — A party with whom money is deposited subject to order of court is not, necessarily, a receiver, as the term is generally understood.²

II. NATURE OF RECEIVERSHIPS — 1. In General. — A receivership is one of the remedial agencies devised to preserve the fund or thing in question from removal beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or from spoliation, waste, or deterioration, pending the litigation, so that it may be appropriated as the final decree shall provide.³ The appointment of a receiver has accordingly been said to be "one of the modes in which the preventive justice of a court of equity is administered."⁴

2. Receivership Provisional and Ancillary Remedy. — Receiverships are provisional or auxiliary to the main purpose of the action, and are never resorted to for a final determination of the rights of the parties.⁵ But while it is true that, in general, a receivership is ancillary or incidental to the main purpose of the litigation, yet it does not follow that where a case is presented which demands the relief that can best be given by a receivership, such relief must be refused because the time has not arrived when other substantial relief can be afforded.⁶

3. Appointment of Receiver as Equitable Execution. — The appointment of a receiver has been said to be an equitable execution.⁷ By such procedure the court is able to reach only such interest in the property impounded as the creditors on whose application the receiver was appointed might have reached by execution.⁸ It will be seen that a court of equity, in taking possession of

Common-law Receiver. — This rather misleading expression has been used to designate a person appointed by the court to receive the rents, issues, and profits of land, or any other thing in question in the court of chancery, pending a suit, where it does not seem reasonable to the court that either party should do it. property by its receiver, reverses, in great measure, the ordinary course of justice, thereby making a general instead of a specific appropriation of the property, subsequently determining who is entitled to the benefit of its quasi process.¹

4. Appointment as Equitable Assignment. — It has been held that, in an action to dissolve a partnership, the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the firm assets, collecting the debts due to and paying those due from the firm, operates as an equitable assignment for the benefit of the firm's creditors.²

III. OBJECT AND PURPOSE OF APPOINTMENT. — The object and purpose of the appointment of a receiver may be generally stated to be the preservation of the subject-matter of the litigation pending a judicial determination of the rights of the parties thereto.³

IV. JURISDICTION TO APPOINT RECEIVERS — 1. General Equity Jurisdiction — a. IN GENERAL. — The appointment of a receiver is a remedy of purely equitable origin, having originated in the English Court of Chancery, where it has been employed from a very early time.⁴ It is, indeed, one of the oldest equitable remedies, and grows out of the inherent power of a court of equity to afford relief where the remedies to be obtained in the courts of ordinary jurisdiction are inadequate.⁵ From its origin in English chancery, where all the leading principles in relation to its exercise were well established long before the American Revolution, the power to create a receivership has naturally and regularly descended to, and become one of the inherent powers of, all courts exercising an equitable jurisdiction.⁶

4. Origin and Antiquity of Remedy. — The practice of appointing sequestrators and receivers of rents and profits, which was very common in the reign of Elizabeth, seems to have begun in the reign of Edward VI., since in that reign the first bill is to be met with for restraining a party from receiving the rents and profits. 1 Spence's Eq. Jur. 673, citing Savill v. Romsden, 1 Cald. 131, and Jordan v. Armes, Reg. Lib. 5 Ph. & M. fol. 48. In this latter case the property was sequestered into the hands of the chamberlain of London and one of the aldermen, pending the trial of the right at law, and on May 20, 1588, a sequestrator or receiver of real estate was appointed.

b. EXHAUSTION OF LEGAL REMEDIES — (1) General Rule. — As the appointment of a receiver is a remedy of equitable origin and jurisdiction, one of the prerequisites is, in general, the exhaustion of any existent remedy at law.¹ So a receiver will not be appointed when the controversy is upon a mere question of legal right,² or when the party can assert his right by a direct action at law.³

Power to Issue Execution. — A receiver will not, in general, be appointed where the creditor may issue execution and recover his debt by a sale of the debtor's property.⁴

(2) Exceptions to General Rule. — There are, it has been held, exceptions to this general rule where relief is granted in special circumstances of an equitable nature, such as appeal strongly to the conscience of the court,⁵ but the Supplementary Proceedings — Issuance of Execution Since Acquisition of Estate. — A receiver will not be appointed to sell an estate of a judgment debtor, disclosed by his examination in supplementary proceedings, where it does not appear that an execution has been issued and returned since the acquisition of the estate. Bunn v. Daly, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 526.

Return of Execution Unsatisfied. — Where a creditor recovered a judgment against a corporation, which was, under such creditor's instructions to the sheriff, returned nulla bona without any actual or bona fide attempt to satisfy it, it was held that there had been no such exhaustion of legal remedies as would support a bill for a receiver. Stirlen v. Jewett, 165 Ill. 410.

5. See Corcoran v. Doll, 35 Cal. 476; Knighton v. Young, 22 Md. 359; Rogers v. Marshall, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 457; Rollins v. Henry, 77 N. Car. 469.

Rule in Supplementary Proceedings. — Under Stat. Minn. (1894), § 5492, a receiver of a judgment debtor's mortgaged property may be appointed in supplementary proceedings, although the judgment creditor and mortgagee mere fact that the remedy at law has been overlooked¹ or has been lost by the laches of the aggrieved party² is no excuse for the application to a court of equity for a receiver.

(3) Legal Remedy Must Be "Complete, Prompt, and Efficient." — But it is not enough to defeat jurisdiction in equity that there is some remedy at law. The remedy at law, to have this effect, must be complete, prompt, and efficient.³

c. RECEIVERS OF CORPORATIONS. — A court of equity has no inherent or common-law jurisdiction to appoint a receiver for a corporation, and it has been held that it cannot, therefore, exercise this power in the absence of a statute so providing.⁴ But the power to appoint a receiver pendente lite with power, merely, to care for and preserve the property committed to his charge is one incidental to the jurisdiction of a court of equity. It does not and never did depend upon statute, nor upon the character of the parties whether individuals or corporations, nor upon the nature of the property.⁵ In most states the equitable powers of courts have been enlarged by statutes conferring express jurisdiction to appoint receivers over incorporated companies.⁶ Such statutes are strictly construed, and the appointment of a has not exhausted his mortgage security. Bean v. Heron, 65 Minn. 64.

1. Although It May Be Manifest that Great Injustice Has Been Done to a Defendant at Law by the verdict and judgment against him there, yet if this injustice has not been produced by any fraud or surprise on the part of the plaintiff, but is the result either of the defendant's own negligence or of his counsel's ignorance or bad management, a court of equity can give him no relief. Tapp v. Rankin, 9 Leigh (Va.) 478. See also Faulkner v. Harwood, 6 Rand. (Va.) 125; Auditor v. Nicholas, 2 Munf. (Va.) 31; Arthur v. Chavis, 6 Rand. (Va.) 142.

3. Crane v. McCoy, 1 Bond (U. S.) 422. And see the preceding subdivisions.

Where Legal Remedy Doubtful or Difficult. — The general doctrine seems to be that a receiver is appointed because the remedy at law is not complete or not effectual enough, and the jurisdiction ought at least to be exercised when the legal remedy is shown to be doubtful or difficult. See the opinion of Vice-Chancellor Chatterton in Beamish v. Austen, Ir. Rep. 9 Eq. 364; Lord Chancellor Plunket's remarks in Manly v. Hawkins, 1 Dr. & Wal. 372; and in Swift v. Swift, 3 Ir. Eq. The Most Common Exercise of This Power to appoint a receiver pendente lite was in foreclosure suits, whenever by reason of the insufficiency of the security it became necessary to impound the rents and profits of the mortgaged property during the litigation, in order that they might, after the decree and sale, be applied upon the debt for the security of the mortgagee. *Hollenbeck v. Railroad Receivers. — This particular jurisdiction has been extended to and is frequently exercised upon the foreclosure of mortgages upon railroads, and receivers of such property are charged with the duty of the operation of the road pending the foreclosure suit, to the end that the value of the property, which necessarily depends largely upon the continuance of its business, may not be depreciated, and also to the end that its income may not be diverted to the payment and satisfaction of debts which are not liens upon the property. receiver usually rests within the sound discretion of the court.¹

2. Jurisdiction of Courts of Law. — The jurisdiction to appoint a receiver does not exist in courts of law, as such, unless specially conferred.²

3. Statutory Jurisdiction. — In most states statutory provisions exist conferring jurisdiction on the appointment of receivers by particular courts or in particular proceedings. These should be consulted by the practitioner before resorting to any mere general treatise. "As regards the statutes," it has been said by the United States Supreme Court, "we see no reason why a court of equity, in the exercise of its undoubted authority, may not accomplish all the best results intended to be secured by such legislation without its aid."³ Cases citing or construing such statutes will be found in the notes.⁴

4. Jurisdiction as Dependent on Situs of Property — a. IN GENERAL. — A receiver may be appointed for all property within the jurisdiction of the court, irrespective of whether the owner is or is not within such jurisdiction.⁵ And a receiver may be appointed for the express purpose of preventing the removal beyond such jurisdiction of property within the jurisdiction of the court.⁶

b. FOREIGN CORPORATIONS. — So a receiver may be appointed for the Appointment in Action at Law. — There may be no appointment of a receiver in an action at law against a corporation, although it consents to such appointment, and though it is alleged that the corporation is insolvent, that other creditors are threatening to sue, that the defendant has no property out of which to satisfy the judgment demanded, and that the action is brought in behalf of all other creditors willing to come in as plaintiffs. Smith v. Superior Ct., 97 Cal. 348.

3. Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 220, per Swayne, J.

So, it has been held, the power of the New York Supreme Court to appoint a receiver of a corporation after the return of an unsatisfied execution, though conferred by statute, is to be deemed within the general jurisdiction of the court, and the facts to establish such power need not be proved. Palmer v. Clark, (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 4 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 25.

Presumption as to Jurisdiction. — Where it is not shown and it is uncertain whether a particular receiver was appointed under a statute or as an exercise of the general chancery jurisdiction of the court, the latter will be presumed. Hegewisch v. Silver, 140 N. Y. 414.

Rule by Statute. — But in Rhode Island it has been held that under Pub. Stat. (1882), c. 237 (Gen. Laws R. I. 1896, c. 274), the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of the estate of an insolvent nonresident. Wheelock's Petition, 18 R. I. 463.

property of a foreign corporation.¹ But it has been said that a state court will not, in general, appoint a receiver for a foreign corporation where this will entail the assumption of the management of the affairs of the corporation itself,² or where the appointment is for the purpose of winding up its affairs.³ Where the purpose of a suit is to wind up a corporation, or where a general receivership of the property of such concern is sought, the initial proceedings should be at the place of domicile and other receiverships should be ancillary thereto.⁴

5. Jurisdiction of Person of Owner. — Where a court has jurisdiction of the person of the owner of property, it seems that a receiver may be appointed for the property though it is not within the jurisdiction of the court.⁵ The court may, by a coercion of the person of the debtor, oblige him either to bring the property in dispute within the jurisdiction of the court, or to execute such a conveyance or transfer thereof as will be sufficient to vest the legal title as well as the possession of the property according to the lex loci rei sitæ.⁶ But a court has no power to appoint a receiver of debts due to the defendant from persons in foreign jurisdictions who are not parties to the suit where neither the nature of the debts nor the identity of the persons from whom they are due is shown.⁷

6. Appointment by Legislature. — It has been held that the appointment by the legislature of a receiver to settle the affairs of an insolvent bank is not a judicial act, nor is it otherwise unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts.⁸

7. Appointment by Governor. — In rare cases power has been conferred on the governor of a state to appoint a receiver for a particular purpose. A statute of this nature has been held constitutional.¹

V. GROUNDS FOR APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER — 1. In General. — As the main object of the appointment of a receiver is, as hereinbefore shown, the preservation of the property or thing in controversy pending the litigation concerning it, so the principal ground for the appointment of a receiver is, generally stated, danger of the loss of or injury to such property or thing in controversy before the court can make disposition thereof by a final decree on the merits.²

Where Requisite Danger of Loss Not Shown. — In the absence of a showing of some probable danger of loss of or injury to the property involved, affecting the interest therein of the party applying for the receiver, no appointment will be made.³ Merely technical injuries, or those which involve only nominal consequences to the party seeking the appointment of a receiver, or circumstances which are doubtful, are not sufficient to call into action the conscience of the chancellor,⁴ nor will a receiver be appointed when a lis pendens has been filed whereby the rights and interests of the plaintiff are as effectually protected as they would be by a receiver.⁵

Contemplated Removal of Property. — It has been held that the fact that a debtor is about to remove his property out of the state, so that the creditor may lose his debt or have to sue for it in another jurisdiction, does not of itself entitle the creditor to the appointment of a receiver.⁶

Construction of Statute — Danger of Loss Clause.

— A statute authorizing the appointment of a receiver in an action by a vendor to vacate a fraudulent purchase, or by a creditor to subject any fund to his claim, or between partners or others jointly owning or interested in any property, on application of any person whose right or interest in the property is probable, where the property is in danger of material injury, does not, it has been held, provide an additional case for the appointment of a receiver, but merely provides when, in the instance before mentioned, a receiver may be appointed. State v. Eighth Judicial Dist. Ct., 14 Mont. 577.

But under Code Civ. Pro. Mont. (1898), § 951, it was held that a receiver would be appointed where there was imminent danger that property in possession of the defendant would be removed beyond the jurisdiction of the court with reference to the grounds upon which receivers may be appointed. These statutes should invariably be consulted by the practitioner, as only a general treatment of the grounds for the appointment of receivers, without more than passing reference to any particular statute, will be found herein. It has been held that a state statute which specifies certain cases in which a receiver may be appointed does not of necessity materially alter the equitable jurisdiction of the courts upon the subject;¹ but where the legislature has prescribed the cases in which a receiver may be appointed and other provisional remedies granted, the specification of the cases in which a receivership may be had excludes every other case and prohibits the appointment of a receiver except as authorized.² A few of the questions which have been raised under some of the state statutes will be found in the notes.³

3. Under English Judicature Act. — By the English Judicature Act of 1873, section 25, subsection 8, it is provided that a receiver may be appointed, upon terms or otherwise, "in all cases in which it shall appear to the court to be just or convenient that such order should be made."⁴ But even under this act the court will appoint a receiver in behalf of a judgment creditor only where there is some impediment in the way of getting a legal execution, or where special circumstances exist to bring the case within the terms of the statute.⁵

4. Under Canadian Judicature Act. — An identical provision with that in force in England is made under the similar enactment in the province of Ontario,⁶ and it is settled that under this act the court will appoint a receiver and unlawfully disposed of. State v. Second Judicial Dist. Ct., 22 Mont. 241. And see Loaiza v. Superior Ct., 85 Cal. 11, 20 Am. St. Rep. 197.

2. Fellows v. Heermans, (Ct. App.) 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 7.

3. Receiver under Insolvent Trader's Act. — Under a statute providing for the appointment of a receiver for an insolvent trader, the appointment of a receiver for one who at the time of the appointment has ceased to be a trader is improper. Birdsong v. Allen-Dumas Co., 94 Ga. 729.

And it has been held that a merchant whose store has been closed and whose stock has been seized by the sheriff in proceedings to foreclose a chattel mortgage is not a trader within the meaning of such an act. Hobbs v. Sheffield, 87 Ga. 455.

Receiver under Landlord and Tenant Act. — Under the North Carolina landlord and tenant act, a receiver to collect the rents and profits may be appointed where an insolvent tenant wrongfully holds over. Nesbitt v. Turrentine, 83 N. Car. 535.

Failure to Pay Employees. — Under Acts of Maryland 1878, c. 108, a receiver may be appointed for any persons or corporations engaged in manufacturing who fail to pay persons in their employ. For a construction of this act, see Clark v. Renninger, 89 Md. 66.

Presumption of Insolvency from Receivership. — Where a statute authorizes a receivership for other reasons than insolvency, there is no presumption of insolvency from receivership. Shuey v. Holmes, 20 Wash. 13.

4. See Anglo-Italian Bank v. Davies, 9 Ch. D. 286.

Illustrations. — It has been held, under the English Judicature Act referred to in the text, that there may be an appointment of a receiver where a sequestration is ineffectual. Bryant v. Bull, 10 Ch. D. 155.

The act has also been held to authorize the appointment of a receiver in the following cases:

Where the estates of which the plaintiffs were legal and equitable mortgagees were mixed up together, and there was no adverse possession. Pease v. Fletcher, 1 Ch. D. 275.

Until the hearing, in an action of partition, where one of the co-owners was in occupation of the property, though not in exclusive occupation thereof. Porter v. Lopes, 7 Ch. D. 359.

Against a defaulting trustee who had failed to pay money into court as ordered, and who was out of the jurisdiction of the court so that he could not be attached. In re Coney, 29 Ch. D. 995. And see Stanger Leathes v. Stanger Leathes, W. N. (1882) 71.

In favor of a plaintiff who had obtained judgment against husband and wife, over the income of the wife's reversionary interest under a will. Fuggle v. Bland, 11 Q. B. D. 711.

In favor of a claimant of property seized on execution pending an interpleader issue order to try the title to the goods. Howell v. Dawson, 13 Q. B. D. 68.

Under the special circumstances that the property was wasting and was insufficient security, in favor of the plaintiff in an ejectment action. Real, etc., Advance Co. v. McCarthy, 27 W. R. 706.

For Other Instances of the Appointment of a Receiver under This Act, and a construction of its terms, see Anglo-Italian Bank v. Davies, 9 Ch. D. 286; Smith v. Cowell, 6 Q. B. D. 79; Harris v. Beauchamp, (1894) 1 Q. B. 801, 9 Reports 653.

only upon a proper case being made out for the exercise of its jurisdiction, according to established principles.¹ It is in such sense only that a receiver can be said to be ex debito justitiæ.²

5. Where Title to Property in Dispute. — While the mere fact that the title to property is in dispute is insufficient to warrant the appointment of a receiver,³ this circumstance in connection with others showing the person in possession to be unable or unwilling properly to care for it pending a determination of the conflicting claims presents a proper case for a receiver.⁴

6. Parties Equally Entitled. — A receiver may be appointed where all of several parties are equally entitled to the possession of the property which is the subject-matter of the controversy, but it is not just and proper from the nature of the dispute and the mutual relations of the parties that any one of them should be allowed to retain possession and control during the litigation to the exclusion of the others. An illustration of this is the case of receivers for partnership assets pending a dissolution and winding up of the business,⁵ or pending litigation between joint tenants, tenants in common, or other co-owners, in which rights claimed in or arising out of the common property are in dispute.⁶

7. Fraud. — A receiver will be appointed to prevent a fraudulent transfer or assignment of personal property, or to take possession of property fraudulently conveyed. Such a transaction, contemplated or accomplished, shows a sufficient danger of loss to one showing title to or interest in the property.⁷

2. Smith v. Port Dover, etc., R. Co., 12 Ont. App. 290, 25 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 640.

3. Title in Dispute. — The necessity for showing other grounds than a mere conflict of claim to the title and possession of the property which is the subject of litigation is insisted upon in Beecher v. Bininger, 7 Blackf. (U. S.) 173, where the court, per Woodruff, J., said that there must be shown "some emergency, some peril of loss which the court will be unable completely to redress; and the danger must be clear and the right, in general, free from reasonable doubt."

Where an Injunction Has Been Granted which prevents certain claimants of a lien on property in their possession from properly caring for their own interests therein or those of other parties therein, a receiver will be appointed. Lehigh v. World's Columbian Exposition, 67 Ill. App. 27.

To Prevent Multiplicity of Suits. — Hopper v. Morgan, (N. J. 1898) 42 Atl. Rep. 171.

Where There Are Conflicting Claimants of a Trust Fund who are prosecuting in the same court separate suits to subject the fund to their claims, the appointment of a receiver in one of the suits, on the motion of the plaintiff in that suit, will inure to the benefit of the plaintiff in the other suit, upon the establishment of his superior right to the fund. *Beverley v. The Fraud of a Surviving Partner, colluding with a fictitious creditor to defraud firm creditors, and a wasting of the firm's assets are sufficient to authorize the appointment of a receiver, though on the application of simple contract creditors whose claims have not been reduced to judgment. Byrne v. Lake Charles First Nat. Bank, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 194.

Fraudulent Repossession of Property by Vendor. — Relief by receivership is also granted in favor of the vendee where the vendor has fraudulently repossessed himself of the property.¹

Where Attachment Might Have Been Levied. — But an attachment creditor whose attachment could have been levied on property alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed has been held not entitled to the appointment of a receiver.²

8. Insolvency — a. IN GENERAL. — It may be stated, as a general rule, that the court will not exercise its discretion in favor of the appointment of a receiver for property in the possession of a person unless it is shown that such person is insolvent, or, at least, that there is some doubt of his ability to respond to a judgment for damages for any loss of or injury to the property.³ Thus it has been decided that a receiver ought not to be appointed in a proceeding for the partition of property theretofore left in the hands of one of the parties to manage in the common interest if there is no allegation of the insolvency of such person.⁴ So, also, the fact that it is not shown or suggested that the adverse party is not able to answer any demands that may be established against him has been held a reason for not granting an application for a receiver based on the fraudulent character of a conveyance.⁵

b. INSOLVENCY AS SOLE GROUND. — Whilst insolvency is not always, or even generally, a sufficient sole ground for the appointment of a receiver,⁶ it appears that in foreclosure cases, and others relating to the rents and profits of real estate, the insolvency of the defendant is sufficient ground for the appointment of a receiver when coupled with the inadequacy of the security.⁷

Fraudulent Concealment of Receipt of Property. — For appointment of a receiver in such circumstances, see Bird v. Lanphear, 92 Hun (N. Y.) 567.

Fraudulent Disposition of Property by Foreign Corporation. — Dreyfus v. Seale, 37 N. Y. App. Div. 351.

Fraudulent Mismanagement of Corporate Affairs. — Texas Consol. Compress, etc., Assoc. v. Storrow, (C. C. A.) 92 Fed. Rep. 5.

Action to Set Aside Fraudulent Conveyance. — It has been held, however, that a receiver will not be appointed pendente lite in an action by a judgment creditor to have an alleged fraudulent conveyance set aside, and the property made subject to his execution, since the debtor would be entitled to the rents and profits of the property until the time of redemption from the execution sale had expired. National Union Bank v. Riger, 38 N. Y. App. Div. 123.

Fraudulent Conveyance by Insolvent Firm. — Though a prima facie case is made of a fraudulent conveyance by an insolvent firm of all its property to a single creditor, to the injury of its other creditors, yet if the purchasing creditor is solvent, and the complaining creditors are without judgments or other liens, and have no claim to the property by reason of fraud in the creation of their demands or otherwise, an injunction should not be granted nor a receiver appointed. Stillwell v. Savannah Grocery Co., 88 Ga. 100.

Hearsay Evidence of Fraud. — But where a receiver was sought for notes in the possession of the defendant, alleged to be fraudulently held by him, but the evidence of fraud was entirely hearsay, and was denied by one having personal knowledge, and there was no proof of the defendant's insolvency, it was held that a receiver should not be appointed. *Roberts v. Matter of Discretion for Court. — The defendant's insolvency may or may not be cause for the appointment of a receiver, in the sound discretion of the court. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 27 Fed. Rep. 158; Sheffield v. Parker, 96 Ga. 774, 22 S. E. Rep. 450.

7. See Hughes v. Hatchett, 55 Ala. 634;

It has also been held that the appointment of a receiver will unhesitatingly be made where the party in the actual receipt of the rents and profits is shown to be insolvent, as in such case the rents and profits are exposed to imminent danger, or, indeed, to inevitable loss.¹ It has been declared, accordingly, a safe general rule that a receiver should be appointed when insolvency is alleged and is not denied upon the hearing of the application, and it is made to appear that there is danger that the assets will be misappropriated or wasted.²

c. INSOLVENCY COUPLED WITH DANGER OF LOSS. — As the cases often state, it is only where the insolvency of the party is likely to result in loss of the fund or property in controversy that a receiver may be appointed on the ground of insolvency.³

d. ATTEMPT TO CREATE UNLAWFUL PREFERENCE. — As a general rule, an attempt by an insolvent debtor to create unlawful preferences among his creditors is sufficient to warrant the appointment of a receiver.⁴

9. Nonpayment of Taxes. — Where the party in possession of property fails to pay the taxes thereon, a receiver may be appointed on the application of one with a specific interest in the property, such as a mortgagee or remainderman;⁵ or a receiver may, at least, be appointed for enough of the income of the property to pay the taxes in arrear.⁶ But where a statute provides that a mortgagee, in order to save mortgaged premises from being sold for taxes, may pay the taxes and include the amount in the mortgage debt, equity will not, in general, interfere by the appointment of a receiver, as the statute in question fully protects the mortgagee's rights.⁷ Nor should a receiver be appointed on the ground of unpaid taxes where a reversioner, occupying jointly with the tenant of the precedent estate, mortgages the reversion and agrees with the mortgagee to keep the taxes paid.⁸

10. Where Trustee Neglects, Abuses, or Mismanages Trust — a. RELUCTANCE OF COURT TO SUPERSEDE TRUSTEE. — It may be stated as an undoubted general rule in this connection that a court of equity is reluctant to disturb the possession or control of a lawfully constituted trustee and to supersede such authority by the appointment of a receiver.⁹ A trustee will not be displaced and a receiver appointed on slight or insignificant grounds.¹⁰ Thus it has been said that a court would not, at the instance of one of several parties interested in an estate, displace a competent trustee, or take the possession from him, unless he wilfully or ignorantly permitted the property to be placed in a state of insecurity which due care or conduct would have prevented.¹ And it would require a particularly strong case, it has been held, to warrant the appointment of a receiver of an internal improvement fund, created by the legislature and vested in the governor and other state officers as trustees.²

b. DANGER OF LOSS. — Danger to the trust fund or property is a prerequisite to the interference of the court with the trustee's possession.³ A receiver for property in the hands of trustees should not, therefore, be appointed when it does not appear that the trustees are insolvent, or that the property may be dissipated.⁴ Thus, where a trustee for creditors offers to file a bond in double the value of the property in his hands, he should not be superseded by the appointment of a receiver, though such trustee is the son of the grantor, in the absence of any showing that he is unfit for the position.⁵

c. WHEN RECEIVER WILL BE APPOINTED — (1) In General. — Notwithstanding the reluctance of a court to supersede a trustee by the appointment of a receiver, if it appears that the trustee has been guilty of positive misconduct or waste, or an improper disposition of the trust estate, or that he has an undue bias towards one of two conflicting parties, or that the estate is liable to be wasted or destroyed, a proper case is made out for the appointment of a receiver.⁶

taking possession of the trust property, the court will, upon the application of one or more bondholders, secured by a lien on the property, appoint a receiver to act in their stead.¹

Acceptance of Inconsistent Trust. — A receiver may be appointed where trustees have accepted another and inconsistent trust.²

If the Trustee under a Corporation Mortgage fails to perform his duty, a receiver may be appointed in his stead.³

(2) Loss of Trust Funds. — The loss of a portion of a trust fund is prima facie a breach of trust, and sufficient ground for the appointment of a receiver.⁴

(3) Disputes and Dissensions among Cotrustees. — Where there are such disputes and dissensions among trustees as to endanger the trust property, a receiver may be appointed.⁵ And where there is a dispute among the parties to a suit as to the continued existence of a trust, it has been held that the court would appoint a receiver if the property involved needed protection, pending the final hearing of the controversy.⁶ But a mere misunderstanding between two executors is not a sufficient ground for the appointment of a receiver.⁷

(4) Where Trustee Refuses to Act. — Where a trustee refuses to act a receiver may be appointed for the trust property.⁸ But it has been said that it never has been the practice to appoint a receiver solely because one of several trustees has disclaimed, or is inactive, or has gone abroad.⁹ A receiver may, however, be appointed pending the appointment of new trustees because one or more of several joint trustees refuse to act.¹⁰

(5) Where Trustee Beyond Jurisdiction. — A receiver may be appointed where the trustee is beyond the jurisdiction of the court.¹¹ So when an executor removes from the jurisdiction of the court, leaving both his cestui que trust and the trust estate within the jurisdiction, it is the duty of the court of equity, on the application of the cestui que trust, to appoint a receiver.¹²

(6) Rule Applied to Executors and Administrators. — Where a proper case is made out a court of equity will appoint a receiver over the estate of a decedent, but a strong case must be shown to induce the court to dispossess an executor who is willing to act.¹³ A receiver will not be appointed upon light grounds to displace the possession of an executor who has qualified and given bonds for the faithful discharge of his trust.¹ Where, however, an executor or administrator has been guilty of serious waste and gross mismanagement of the estate, or misappropriation of the funds, he may be dispossessed of his possession and a receiver appointed.² And where a receiver of the estate of a decedent has been appointed the court may, for the purpose of preserving the property, restrain the executor from intermeddling with the management of the estate and compel him to give up the control of it to the receiver.³ But a receiver will not, in general, be appointed where the probate court has full power to give relief and protection in the premises,⁴ though where it was shown that an administrator was selling personal property fraudulently conveyed to his decedent, this was held sufficient to justify the appointment of a receiver, although the administrator was making the sales under order of court, and depositing the proceeds in bank.⁵

Effect of Appointment of Receiver. — The appointment of a receiver for the estate of a decedent does not ipso facto remove the executor or administrator or destroy his character as the legal representative of the estate.⁶

(7) Testamentary Trusts. — In proceedings to enforce a testamentary trust or a devise, a receiver may be appointed if the court is satisfied that the intention of the testator has been disregarded and that the rents and profits are in peril.⁷

(8) Receiver Superseding Assignee — (a) In General. — Where a general assignment has been made for the benefit of creditors, a court of equity will not assume jurisdiction at the instance of some of the creditors and remove the assignee and appoint a receiver as trustee in his stead, unless it is shown that the assignee is incompetent or unfit for his office, or that he has been guilty of some neglect or breach of duty.⁸ But a receiver may be appointed where an assignee for the benefit of creditors refuses to accept the trust,⁹ or where

In Aid of General Assignment. — Where, however, after a general assignment, creditors institute an action to set aside certain conveyances of the assignor made prior to the assignment, a permanent common-law receiver may be appointed for the property so conveyed, with the same rights as the assignee would have had if no receiver had been appointed. *Badger v. Rule under Particular Statute. — Under a statute authorizing the appointment of a receiver whenever, in the discretion of the court, it may be necessary in order to secure ample justice to the parties, a receiver may be appointed for property assigned by a corporation for the benefit of certain creditors, although there is no fraud in the deed. *Goshen Woolen-Mills Co. v. the assignee mismanages the estate,¹ or where the assignment is fraudulent in law or in fact.² And where an insolvent debtor makes an assignment for the benefit of creditors to a person who is also insolvent, a receiver will be appointed.³

(b) To Manage Property. — It may also be necessary to appoint a receiver for assigned property in order that the property may be operated and made productive pending the litigation.⁴

(g) Poverty, Insolvency, or Bankruptcy of Representative or Trustee. — It has been held that mere poverty, or even the insolvency of an administrator, executor, or trustee is not a sufficient ground for the appointment of a receiver,⁵ though it seems that an actual adjudication in bankruptcy presents a stronger case for such an appointment.⁶ The insolvency of a trustee or executor coupled with misconduct or abuse of trust is, however, a good ground for the appointment of a receiver,⁷ and where the trustee is not only extremely poor, but is also of a bad character and of drunken habits, a receiver may be appointed.⁸

11. Where No Person Competent to Hold Property — a. GENERAL RULE. — Where there is no person entitled to the property who is at the same time competent to hold and manage it pending the litigation, a receiver will be appointed.⁹

b. ESTATES OF DECEDENTS. — Pending the litigation over the probate of a will, and during the interval before an executor or administrator is appointed, a court of equity may appoint a receiver of personal property and of the rents and profits of the realty, where there is danger of loss, misuse, or misapplication.¹⁰ But the necessity of such a receiver has been greatly lessened by

Where Good Faith of Assignment Questioned. — The insolvency of an assignee in an assignment for the benefit of creditors, the good faith of which is questioned, coupled with the assignee's refusal to give bond, has been held to be sufficient to warrant the appointment of a receiver. *City Nat. modern statutes authorizing the probate court to appoint a temporary administrator or an administrator ad litem. If a receiver is appointed pending the probate of a will, his duties will in general terminate on the appointment of an administrator pendente lite.¹

c. INFANTS' ESTATES. — It is well settled that where there is no guardian or trustee a court of equity will exercise control over the property of its infant ward by the interposition of a receiver.² And though there may be a guardian, the appointment of a receiver of an infant's estate has sometimes been supported on the ground of the inadequacy of the guardian's power of control and management of the estate.³

d. ESTATES OF IDIOTS AND LUNATICS. — Although the control of the court over the property of an idiot or lunatic is generally exercised by means of a committee, the appointment of a receiver has been held proper pending the return or decision upon the inquisition of lunacy, or where no person will act as a committee,⁴ or after the office of the committee is determined by the death of the lunatic.⁵ A receiver may also be appointed to act in connection with the committee,⁶ or the committee may be appointed receiver.⁷ So in an action to set aside conveyances executed by a person of alleged unsound mind, a receiver has been appointed where the grantee who had been in the possession of the property and collecting the rents and profits thereof was shown to be wholly insolvent.⁸

12. To Carry Judgment or Decree into Effect. — A receiver may be appointed wherever necessary to effectuate the court's judgment or decree.⁹ Nor, it has been held, do the general provisions of the New York Code of Civil Procedure respecting the appointment of receivers for corporations interfere with the powers of a court of equity to appoint a receiver when necessary in order to execute its judgment.¹⁰

be appointed where there is no property for him to take into his possession,¹ or where the only property which could come into the possession of the receiver is covered by liens for more than its value.² And neither will a receiver for a corporation be appointed at the instance of a stockholder whose stock is of no value, and cannot be made of value by the appointment of a receiver.³

But a Mere Denial by the Defendant that he has any property is not a sufficient ground to refuse the appointment of a receiver.⁴

b. WHERE COSTS WILL EXCEED VALUE OF PROPERTY. — Where the costs of the receivership will probably exceed the value of the property involved, a receiver will not, in general, be appointed.⁵

c. EFFECT OF VOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENT. — After the institution of an action for the appointment of a receiver, the appointment cannot be defeated by a voluntary assignment.⁶

14. Bond in Lieu of Receiver. — Where the person in possession of property or receiving rents and profits offers to execute a bond to secure the person seeking a receiver from any loss pending the litigation, a receiver will not, in general, be appointed.⁷ But where a statutory ground exists for the appointment of a receiver, the fact that the court exercises its discretion in favor of the appointment of a receiver will not be deemed erroneous, although a bond is offered to indemnify from all loss.⁸

15. Consent of Parties. — A receiver should not be appointed in an improper case, even by consent of parties, especially where the rights of third persons may be concerned.⁹ Where a receiver is appointed by agreement between the parties to a suit, in order to accomplish an unlawful purpose, such person will be considered the agent of the owner of the property.¹⁰

been said to be that, ordinarily, each partner has an equal right to the possession and control of the partnership effects and business.¹ It has been held that receivers for a partnership should not be appointed on the application of a member thereof, except on a showing that the partners are unable or unwilling to arrange the matters in controversy themselves, or that there is some abuse of partnership rights and property, or some fraud or mismanagement or violation of partnership duties.²

b. IN ACTIONS FOR DISSOLUTION. — In actions for the dissolution of a partnership where the members thereof cannot agree upon an adjustment, it is proper to appoint a receiver if necessary to protect the partnership assets.³

Facts Must Justify Dissolution. — It may be stated generally that equity will not interfere either by injunction or receivership, when the facts as presented do not justify a decree for the dissolution of the partnership.⁴ But a partnership will not be dissolved and a receiver appointed on account of mere differences between the partners where the firm assets are not endangered,⁵ nor on account of the failure of one partner to co-operate with the other,⁶ nor because the business has been unprofitable.⁷

But a partner who has loaned to the firm more than his agreed capital is entitled to come into equity for relief by the repayment of his loan, and, if the firm is insolvent or in failing circumstances, the appointment of a receiver and an injunction. Sieghortner v. Weissenborn, 20 N. J. Eq. 183.

Before Dissolution. — A receiver may, however, be appointed before actual dissolution where the action is of a nature which would authorize a dissolution, and where it is apparent that a dissolution will be decreed on the ground of some breach of duty or contract.¹

After the Dissolution of a Partnership a receiver may be appointed if there is such misconduct or fraud with reference to the partnership assets as seems to render such a course necessary for their preservation,² or, according to other cases, if the parties cannot agree among themselves as to the disposition of the partnership property;³ and this though no insolvency was alleged or proved.⁴ And where all the partners have by agreement divested themselves of the right of winding up the business, a receiver may be appointed.⁵

c. RECEIVER NOT APPOINTED TO CONTINUE BUSINESS. — A court of equity will not appoint a receiver for the purpose of permanently conducting the partnership business.⁶ But a receiver may, for good cause shown, be permitted to continue the business until a sale of the property is made or the litigation is ended.⁷

d. EXCLUSION FROM PARTNERSHIP RIGHTS. — Where there is such an exclusion of one member of a partnership from all voice in the management of its affairs and property as would warrant a dissolution of the partnership, a receiver may be appointed.⁸ It is immaterial in such circumstances that

e. DEATH OF PARTNER. — The death of a partner is not of itself a sufficient ground for the appointment of a receiver, because the surviving partner is vested with the partnership assets in trust to wind up the business and to account to all parties in interest.² But where all of two or more partners die a receiver will be appointed.³ If, however, the surviving partner or partners misappropriate the assets, or seek to continue the business on their own account with the assets of the deceased partner, or unreasonably delay in closing up the business, a receiver will be appointed.⁴

f. MISCONDUCT OF PARTNER. — A receiver of a partnership will, in general, be appointed for the misconduct of a copartner where the conduct is of a nature to amount to or warrant a dissolution of the partnership compact.⁵ Thus, a receiver has been appointed where a partner wilfully violated the terms of the partnership agreement;⁶ where one of the partners had been wasting the joint assets;⁷ where a partner was so mismanaging the business that the partnership assets were in peril;⁸ where a partner had been in collusion with the debtors of the firm and allowed them to delay in paying their debts;⁹ where the evidence showed a deliberate intent on the part of a partner to ruin the firm business;¹⁰ where one of the partners was carrying on a separate trade for his own benefit with the firm's property;¹¹ where insolvent members of a firm attempted to appropriate the firm assets to the payment of their

On Application of Creditor. — Both an injunction and a receiver have been refused where, under a judgment and execution against one partner, his interest in the partnership effects was sold, and the purchaser filed a bill praying for such relief against the partners, but did not show any such gross misconduct by individual debts;¹ where partners continuing the business violated their agreement with a retiring partner;² and where, after dissolution, the remaining partners continued to carry on the business on their own account with the partnership assets.³

g. NECESSITY FOR PARTNERSHIP. — The court will not appoint a receiver to take charge of a business and wind up the affairs of a concern unless it appears that there is a partnership existing between the parties.⁴ A mere unexecuted agreement for partnership is not sufficient. It must be so far completed as to entitle the parties to a participation in the profits.⁵ But where a contract of partnership has been actually entered into, and the person seeking the receivership has paid a portion of his share of the price of the partnership property and given his notes for the balance, and the partnership has gone into operation, the appointment of a receiver is proper.⁶ So, where a partnership was merely nominal, the real relation between the parties being that of employer and employee, a receiver was denied on the application of the latter.⁷

h. DOUBT AS TO EXISTENCE OF PARTNERSHIP. — In case of doubt as to the existence of a partnership, courts of equity will not interfere by a receiver.⁸

i. AGREEMENT AS TO WINDING UP BUSINESS. — Where it is expressly agreed that one or more of the partners shall wind up the business on dissolution of the partnership, a receiver will not be appointed in the absence of fraud or mismanagement.⁹

Foreign Corporation — No Receiver for Experimental Purposes. — Leary v. Columbia River, etc. Nav. Co., 82 Fed. Rep. 775.

Construction of Particular Statute. — Under a statute providing for the appointment of a receiver when a corporation has been dissolved,

Where No Beneficial Purpose Will Be Accomplished. — It may be stated as a general rule, without qualification, that a court of equity will never appoint a receiver for a corporation where such appointment would subserve no beneficial purpose.¹

Danger of Loss. — In the case of corporations, as in other instances, the court will appoint a receiver only when such a course is necessary to preserve the corporate assets from loss or destruction.²

Power to Consent to Appointment. — The president has no power, without the authority of the directors or stockholders, to consent to the appointment of a receiver to wind up the affairs of the corporation.³

b. TO PREVENT FORFEITURE OF FRANCHISE. — A receiver may be appointed for a corporation to prevent the forfeiture of its franchise granted by Congress, by reason of the probable failure of the company to complete certain work within the time limited in the grant.⁴

c. FAILURE TO PURSUE OBJECTS OF CREATION. — Where a corporation fails to pursue the objects of its creation and by reason of insolvency or otherwise is disabled from further operations a receiver is, in general, proper.⁵

d. DISPUTES AMONG MANAGING OFFICERS. — Where there are such disputes and discussions in the board of directors or among the governing officers of a corporation as prevent the management of its affairs a receiver may be appointed.⁶ And where there are two boards of directors each claiming or is in immediate danger of insolvency, or has forfeited its corporate rights, a receiver may not be appointed to take charge of and control the affairs of a corporation where the primary object of the appointment is to wind up the affairs of such corporation or take the management thereof from the directors. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Duckworth, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 618.

Rule under Texas Statute. — The appointment of a receiver for a corporation in any case where a receiver would be appointed by the usages of courts of equity is authorized by Rev. Stat. Tex. 2. That a Corporation Has Lost the Greater Part of Its Property and permanently abandoned its business is not alone ground for the appointment of a receiver for its remaining assets on the application of minority stockholders. It must be shown in addition that its officers have been guilty of such mismanagement of its affairs as renders a receivership necessary to preserve the existing corporate property. Clark v. National Linseed Oil Co., (C. C. A.) 105 Fed. Rep. 787.

Receiver for Municipal Corporation. — A receiver will not be appointed for a municipal corporation merely because its officers are neglecting to exercise its franchises, and contemplate illegally paying out corporate funds. It should appear, in addition, that the corporate franchises are abused, or that the corporation or its officers are insolvent, or that the persons applying for the receiver or the corporation will sustain irreparable damage if a receiver is not appointed. *Hurlbut v. authority as such and attacking the existence of the other, and neither is able to protect the corporation against mismanagement and misappropriation of funds, a receiver will be appointed until the authority of one or the other of the contending boards is established although the corporation is solvent.¹ But where one corporation owns stock in another, a dispute as to the management of the latter between the two sole owners of the stock of the former will not authorize the appointment of a receiver for the former to take charge of the stock in the latter.²

2. MISCONDUCT OF OFFICERS OR DIRECTORS — (1) In General. — The subject of the appointment of a receiver for a corporation on the ground of misconduct of officers or directors has given rise to much apparent conflict in the cases. But however much the decisions seem to differ on the particular facts, the rule generally recognized is that a corporation will be placed in the hands of a receiver for the misconduct of its officers or directors only when necessary to preserve the property or rights of creditors or stockholders.³ The mere misconduct of officers of a corporation is not sufficient ground for the appointment of a receiver, as a court of equity may forbid the misconduct or remove the officer from his position.⁴

Nor Are Mere Irregularities in the management of a corporation, without fraud committed or intended, sufficient for the appointment of a receiver,⁵ courts of equity being very reluctant to appoint receivers for corporations, because

Ability to Betray Trust. — That an officer of a corporation is in a position where he may betray the corporate trust will not justify the appointment of a receiver for the corporation when there is no evidence to establish the probability that such officer will be guilty of any misconduct, and although the appointment of a receiver would do no harm. Young v. Rutan, 69 Ill. App. 513.

The Apprehension that a Suit Brought by a Corporation against an officer thereof will not be diligently prosecuted, owing to the relations of the parties, will not warrant the appointment of a receiver to take charge of such suit where no laches on the part of the corporation is shown. Griffing v. A. A. Griffing Iron Co., 96 Fed. Rep. 577.

5. Mere Irregularities. — Hardee v. Sunset Oil Co., 56 Fed. Rep. 51; Rothwell v. Robinson, 44 Minn. 538; Goebel v. Herancourt Brewing Co., 2 Ohio Dec. 377, 7 Ohio N. P. 230.

Dissatisfaction with Management Not Sufficient Ground. — Fluker v. Emporia City R. Co., 48 Kan. 577.

Failure to File Certificate Showing Increase of Capital Stock. — In the absence of evidence that the certificate was improperly suppressed or withheld to accomplish an unlawful purpose, failure to file a certificate showing an increase of capital stock is not cause for the appointment of a receiver pending a suit against the corporation and its directors for an accounting for the alleged overissue of stock. Thalman v. Hoffman House, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 27 Misc. (N. Y.) 140.

That the Refusal of the Officers of a Corporation to Allow a Stockholder to Examine Its Books is not ground for the appointment of a receiver, see Original Vienna Bakery, etc., Co. v. Heissler, 50 Ill. App. 406.

Receiver for Collection of Unpaid Stock Assessments Refused. — Straman v. North Baltimore Waterworks Co., 4 Ohio Cir. Dec. 339, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. 89.

Acts on Advice of Counsel. — The mere fact that directors of a corporation, on advice of their counsel, refused to permit a pledgee of stock to vote it, though it stood in his name, is not ground for appointment of a temporary receiver for the corporation pending a proceeding to declare the election of the directors void. Thalman v. Hoffman House, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 27 Misc. (N. Y.) 140.

such appointment is a practical displacement of the board of directors and the lawfully constituted corporate authorities.¹

A Receiver of a Corporation May, However, Be Appointed at the instance of any stockholder or creditor when the directors or other officers are putting in jeopardy the rights of stockholders or creditors by grossly mismanaging the business, or by misapplying the property or funds of the corporation.²

Where Corporation Is Solvent. — It has been held that a corporation should not be dissolved and a receiver appointed on the ground of mismanagement, fraud, and abuse of corporate powers, where the corporation is solvent.³

Where One Corporation Owns All the Stock of Another, a receiver of the former will not be appointed for official misconduct, mismanagement, and waste in the conduct of the affairs of the latter.⁴

(2) Failure to Keep Property in Repair. — Under a statute providing for the appointment of receivers whenever necessary to secure ample justice to the parties, it was held a sufficient ground for the appointment of a receiver of a corporation that the directors allowed the corporate property to remain out of repair and so become unproductive.⁵

f. INSOLVENCY — (1) In General. — If a corporation is insolvent and has suspended operations, the court may in its discretion appoint a receiver to protect the interests of both creditors and stockholders.⁶ But where insolvency is the only ground alleged, the application for a receiver is usually denied,⁷ unless it is also made to appear that there is no reasonable prospect

1. Where Directors Have Abdicated Functions. — But where the directors themselves have in effect abdicated their functions by placing the embarrassed corporation in the hands of a trustee for certain of the creditors, the court may interpose, at the instance of nonpreferred creditors, to manage the property of the corporation through a receiver. Consolidated Tank-Line Co. v. Kansas City Varnish Co., 43 Fed. Rep. 204.

2. Where Rights of Stockholders or Creditors Jeopardized. — Sincer v. Alverson, 51 La. Ann. 955; Warren v. Fake, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 49 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 430; Conro v. Gray, (Supm. Ct. Gen. Fraudulent Mismanagement of Affairs. — For an intimation that the appointment of a receiver is proper where the affairs of a corporation are being fraudulently mismanaged, see Texas Consol. Compress, etc., Assoc. v. Storrow, (C. C. A.) 92 Fed. Rep. 5. And see Aiken v. Colorado River Irrigation Co., 72 Fed. Rep. 591.

To Prevent Threatened Fraud and Breach of Trust. — North Fairmount Bldg., etc., Co. v. Rehn, 8 Ohio Dec. 594, 6 Ohio N. P. 185, in which case a receiver for a corporation was appointed. But that a receiver will not be appointed, see Behrens v. Equality Bldg. Assoc., 3 Ohio Dec. 275, 2 Ohio N. P. 259.

Failure to Declare Dividends. — Where it was alleged that the corporation had not declared a dividend for seven years because the defendant, owning a majority of the stock, had controlled the corporation for his own interest and profit, it was held that equity had power to appoint a receiver and to direct the affairs of the corporation to be wound up. *Miner v. Eq. 126; Atty.-Gen. v. Columbia Bank, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 511; Com. v. Pennsylvania Bldg., etc., Assoc., 20 Pa. Co. Ct. 589.

General Assignment of Property. — Where a corporation has been financially embarrassed by unlawful speculative operations, and is also indebted to other creditors whose demands have grown out of its legitimate business operations, and has assigned its assets in trust to secure all creditors indiscriminately, a receiver will be appointed. Leavitt v. Yates, 4 Edw. (N. Y.) 173. And see Consolidated Tank-Line Co. v. Kansas City Varnish Co., 43 Fed. Rep. 204.

7. Onondaga Trust, etc., Co. v. Spartanburg Waterworks Co., 91 Fed. Rep. 324; Doe v. Northwest Coal, etc., Co., 64 Fed. Rep. 928; McGeorge v. Big Stone Gap Imp. Co., 57 Fed. that it will soon be able to resume its business with safety to the public and advantage to its stockholders,¹ or that, in addition to insolvency, the directors or other managing officers have been guilty of fraud, negligence, or mismanagement.²

(2) When Corporation Is Insolvent — (a) In General. — Where it is shown that the assets of a corporation exceed its liabilities by a large sum, the appointment of a temporary receiver is unauthorized under a statute allowing such appointment where a corporation is insolvent;³ nor will a receiver be appointed for a corporation on the mere ground that it has no property subject to levy of execution, if it has equitable rights sufficient to satisfy its debts.⁴ Mere inability to meet current obligations is not conclusive of insolvency,⁵ but a corporation which is largely indebted on past-due claims, the only property of which is not available for the payment of its debts in the ordinary course of business, and which is unable to meet its obligations, has been held insolvent in such sense as to entitle its creditors to have its property sold and the proceeds applied in payment of their claims.⁶

(b) Return of Unsatisfied Execution. — In most of the states of the Union courts of equity are empowered to appoint receivers of the property of corporations, at the suit of judgment creditors, after execution has been returned unsatisfied.⁷

g. DISSOLUTION OF CORPORATION. — When a corporation is dissolved and has no office or place of business, and no officers to attend to its affairs, a receiver may be appointed to preserve the assets for the benefit of the stockholders and creditors.⁸ Where, upon dissolution of a corporation, it is Delinquencies of Stockholders. — The fact that the stockholders of a corporation refuse to aid the company by meeting assessments on their stock or to advance means to relieve it from pecuniary embarrassments when called upon to do so is not ground for the appointment of a receiver, since it is within the power of the trustees to sell out the stock of the delinquent holders. *Baker v. Assets Two-thirds of Capital. — Where the officers of a building and loan association have so mismanaged its affairs that its assets amount to less than two-thirds of the capital paid in, the corporate assets should be placed in the hands of a receiver. Towle v. American Bldg., etc., Soc., 60 Fed. Rep. 131.

provided by statute that the officers of the company shall be trustees for the creditors and stockholders, a receiver should not be appointed unless it appears that the trustees are misconducting themselves and jeopardizing the property.¹

h. WHERE ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW. — A receiver for a corporation will not be appointed at the instance of a stockholder where such stockholder has a full and adequate remedy by action in his own name.²

18. Receivers of Mortgaged Property — a. IN GENERAL. — The power of a court of equity to appoint a receiver pendente lite in foreclosure proceedings is, it has been held, inherent in such court as a part of its incidental jurisdiction, and is not dependent on statutory authorization.³ But a receiver of rents and profits in an action of foreclosure will not be appointed except in a case clearly invoking the equitable power of the court to grant that relief.⁴

Construction of Particular Statute. — But under a statute authorizing the appointment of a receiver upon the dissolution of a corporation, a receivership is not authorized merely upon a judgment excluding the corporation from usurping certain privileges and franchises not conferred upon it by its charter. Yore v. Superior Ct., 108 Cal. 431.

Mere Fact of Dissolution. — The mere fact that a corporation has been dissolved does not in every instance give to the minority stockholders the right to have a receiver appointed and the assets sold, as there may be circumstances which will justify a court of equity in ascertaining the value of the assets without a sale, and in making a distribution to the members on that basis. *Baltimore, etc., R. Appointment at Instance of Unsecured Creditors. — A receiver of mortgaged property should not be appointed at the instance of unsecured creditors merely because it appears that the mortgagees have additional security in the way of collaterals from which they may satisfy a part of the mortgage debt. Burgwyn Bros. Tobacco Co. v. Bentley, 90 Ga. 508.

Pending Action to Set Aside Deed. — It has been held that a receiver of the rents and profits will not be appointed pending an action to set aside a deed absolute in form and have

b. WHERE NO RENTS OR PROFITS. — A receiver of mortgaged real estate will not be appointed pending a suit to foreclose the mortgage, where it is not necessary to preserve the property and there are no rents or profits accruing therefrom.¹

c. WHERE ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW. — A receiver of mortgaged property will not, as a rule, be appointed on the application of a party who has an adequate remedy at law for his protection.² But a receiver may be appointed in aid of a mortgagee prosecuting an ejectment at law to obtain possession of the mortgaged premises, where insolvency, waste, and insufficiency of the security are shown.³

d. APPOINTMENT PENDING PERIOD FOR REDEMPTION. — A receiver may sometimes be appointed after a decree of foreclosure and sale of mortgaged property, during the period allowed for redemption, but such power will be slowly exercised except in an extreme case and to prevent palpable wrong and injustice.⁴

e. INADEQUACY OF SECURITY—INSOLVENCY OF MORTGAGOR. — The two principal grounds for the appointment of receivers to collect the rents and profits of mortgaged property are, first, the inadequacy of the security to discharge the mortgage debt, and second, the insolvency of the mortgagor, or the likelihood that a deficiency judgment would be unavailing.⁵ It has

it declared a mortgage. McCool v. Mc-Namara, (Supm. Ct.) 19 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 344.

Thus, under the Old English Practice the courts would not appoint a receiver on the application of a legal mortgagee. Pease v. Fletcher, 1 Ch. D. 275. See Reid v. Middleton, T. & R. 456; Berney v. Sewell, 1 Jac. & W. 627. And see Beverley v. Brooke, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 187.

But a legal mortgagee who was prevented by the mortgagor from taking possession under the mortgage might obtain the appointment of a receiver. Truman v. Redgrave, 18 Ch. D. 547.

Under the Judicature Act, however, it has been held that a legal mortgagee may obtain a receiver instead of taking the risk of entering on the property. Pease v. Fletcher, 1 Ch. D. 275.

Assignment of Rents. — That when the mortgage was executed the mortgagor gave to the mortgagee therein named a written assignment of the rents cannot, however, be urged by the mortgagor as a reason against the appointment of a receiver. Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Backus, 64 Minn. 43.

Application of Rents Received During Period of Redemption. — It has been held that a receiver appointed in a suit to foreclose a junior mortgage has no right to apply the rents and profits received during the period of redemption to the payment of interest on the first mortgage, as the purchaser at a foreclosure sale takes the title "with all its infirmities and burdens." Stevens v. Hadfield, 90 Ill. App. 405.

been held that in such circumstances equity may appoint a receiver although the mortgage does not, by express words, give a lien upon the income of the property.¹ In some jurisdictions the rule is that the insolvency of the mortgagor and the inadequacy of the security will not justify the appointment of a receiver in the absence of a specific pledge of the rents and profits, or express provision for a receiver on default.² But where, in addition to inadequacy and insolvency, other equitable grounds exist, as the nonpayment of taxes, waste, danger of loss or injury to the mortgaged premises, a receiver will be appointed, and this rule, it is believed, prevails in all jurisdictions.³

f. ADEQUACY OF SECURITY. — It may be stated as a general rule that a receiver of mortgaged property or of the rents and profits thereof will never be appointed where the security is adequate and a receivership is not necessary for its preservation.⁴

g. SOLVENCY OF MORTGAGOR. — It has been held that a receiver will not be appointed where the mortgagor or the persons assuming the mortgage or in possession of the property are solvent and able to respond to any deficiency judgment.⁵

Disposition of Property Not Mortgaged. — In Iowa it has been held that the insufficiency of the mortgaged property to satisfy the debt, the insolvency of the mortgagor, and the fact that he had disposed of certain of his property not included in the mortgage to prevent the collection of the mortgage debt, did not justify the appointment of a receiver. White v. Griggs, 54 Iowa 650. And see American Invest. Co. v. Farrar, 87 Iowa 437.

In Aid of Ejectment. — So a receiver was appointed in aid of a mortgagee who was prosecuting an ejectment at law, where it appeared that the mortgagor was insolvent, and had removed from the premises and given possession to another who occupied for his own use without paying rent; it appearing also that the mortgagor had committed waste and threatened to commit more, and that the premises were an insufficient security. *Brasted v. h. MERE FACT THAT SECURITY INSUFFICIENT. — According to the rule of some cases, the mere fact that real property is insufficient to pay the debt for which it is mortgaged is sufficient for the appointment of a receiver of the rents and profits pending an action of foreclosure.¹

i. PROTECTION FROM WASTE OR DESTRUCTION — (1) General Rule. — Irrespective of any distinction made by some authorities between cases where the rents have been specifically pledged and where not, or where there is or is not an express provision for the appointment of a receiver, it may be stated as a general rule that there may always be a receiver for mortgaged property or the rents and profits thereof where a receivership is necessary for the preservation of the corpus of the security.² So it has been held that a receiver may be appointed after foreclosure and before the period of redemption has expired, for the purpose of collecting the rents and profits to protect and preserve the mortgaged property from waste, but not to apply such rents and profits to the payment of any deficiency remaining after sale.³

(2) Appointment Before Default in Mortgage. — Where it is necessary in order to preserve the security, a receiver for mortgaged property may be appointed before default in the mortgage.⁴

(3) Appointment at Instance of Mortgagor. — A receiver of mortgaged property may be appointed at the instance of the mortgagor as against a mortgagee in possession, where the latter is insolvent and is guilty of mismanagement, fraud, and waste.⁵

j. EXPRESS PROVISION AS TO RENTS. — In order to the appointment of

1. Inadequacy of Security Alone. — Sweet, etc., Co. v. Union Nat. Bank, 149 Ind. 305; Nesbit v. Wood, (Ky. 1900) 56 S. W. Rep. 714; Waldron v. Greenwood First Nat. Bank, 60 Neb. 245; Philadelphia Mortg., etc., Co. v. Goos, 47 Neb. 804; Ecklund v. Willis, 42 Neb. 737; Browning v. Stacey, 52 N. Y. App. Div. 626, 65 N. Y. Supp. 203; Putnam v. McAllister, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 57 N. Y. Supp. 404; Ogdensburgh Bank v. Arnold, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 38.

Where Security "Probably Insufficient." — A statute authorizing the appointment of a receiver when, in an action to foreclose a mortgage, it is made to appear that the mortgaged premises are "probably insufficient to discharge the mortgage debt" does not warrant the appointment merely because the property at some future time may become insufficient, as it cannot be known that the mortgage debt will not be discharged before such date has arrived. Laune v. Hauser, 58 Neb. 663. Compare State Journal Co. v. Commonwealth Co., 43 Kan. 93.

Where Interest Accumulating and Property Not Increasing in Value — Receiver Appointed. — Hill v. Robertson, 24 Miss. 375.

Seizure of Mortgaged Property under Attachment. — A receiver will be appointed and a sale restrained where mortgaged property is seized under attachment as the property of a person other than the mortgagor and is advertised for sale. Wiedemann v. Sann, (N. J. 1895) 31 Atl. Rep. 211.

But in a suit by the mortgagee against the mortgagor, where there is no controversy between such parties, the mere fact that mortgaged goods are being levied upon by creditors of the mortgagor not made parties to the suit will not warrant the appointment of a receiver. Gilbert v. Block, 51 Ill. App. 516.

Mere Disuse of Premises, though attended with incidental depreciation and dilapidation, is not such destruction or waste as to entitle the mortgagee to a receiver on such ground alone. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Union Mills Plaster Co., 37 Fed. Rep. 286.

But a Judgment Creditor of a Mortgagor upon covenants in the mortgage cannot obtain a receivership order to enforce payment by a purchaser of the equity of redemption, who on purchasing agreed to assume and pay the mortgage, although such creditor sues and makes the application for the receiver on behalf of himself and all other creditors of the mortgagor. Palmer v. McKnight, 31 Ont. 306.

a receiver of rents and profits, a mortgage need not by express words give a lien on the rents or income of the property, where the mortgaged premises are insufficient security for the debt and the mortgagor is insolvent or of doubtful responsibility.¹ On the other hand, where the rents are not specifically pledged both the insolvency of the mortgagor and the inadequacy of the security must be shown, mere inadequacy of the corpus of the property being insufficient.² Where rents and profits are specifically pledged a receiver will be appointed pending foreclosure, if the mortgagor is insolvent and the security inadequate,³ although in the absence of an express mortgage provision as to rents and profits, the insolvency of the mortgagor and the inadequacy of the security alone would not be sufficient.⁴

k. EXPRESS PROVISION AS TO RECEIVER. — Not infrequently the mortgage expressly provides for the appointment of a receiver of the rents and profits on default.⁵ But notwithstanding such a stipulation, a court of equity will not appoint a receiver of mortgaged property where such an appointment would be inequitable;⁶ nor will a receiver be appointed, though specially provided for on default, where the mortgage security is ample,⁷ or where, in addition to this, it appears that the taxes upon the property have been fully paid, that the interest was met when last due, and that the persons liable for the debt are solvent.⁸ It is quite certain, indeed, that a mere provision for the appointment of a receiver contained in a mortgage cannot confer jurisdiction upon the courts for the appointment of a receiver where none would exist irrespective of such mortgage provision.⁹

l. EFFECT OF APPOINTMENT — (1) In General. — The possession of a receiver in foreclosure proceedings is not the possession of the mortgagee as against other creditors, nor are priorities thereby affected. The receiver

Rule under Particular Statute. — Where it was expressly provided by statute that a mortgagee has no title to land of which the mortgagor is in possession, but only a lien thereon, limited by the terms of the mortgage, and where there was nothing in the mortgage extending the mortgagee's lien to the rents and profits, such mortgagee was held not entitled to the appointment of a receiver of the rents and profits, pending foreclosure proceedings. *Hardin v. merely holds possession for all parties interested.¹

(2) Lien upon Unpaid Rents. — By the appointment of a receiver in a foreclosure suit an equitable lien attaches to the unpaid rents.² Until such appointment, however, the owner of the equity of redemption has a right to receive the rents and cannot be compelled to account for them.³

(3) Prior Mortgagees. — Where receivers of mortgaged property are appointed at the instance of junior incumbrancers, it is always without prejudice to the rights of prior mortgagees, incumbrancers, or lienholders.⁴ So the application for a receiver will be refused, although the mortgagors are nonresident and insolvent, where it appears that the mortgagee has precisely the security that he had when he made the contract, but seeks to intercept the rents and profits and divert them to his own use to the prejudice of prior mortgagees, and there is no evidence of mismanagement of the property.⁵

(4) Possession of First Mortgagee. — On the question of appointing a receiver, equity not only respects the actual possession of the first mortgagee, but is cautious not to interfere with his right to take or obtain the possession if he should desire it.⁶ The court will not, therefore, unless in a very strong case, disturb a mortgagee in possession by the appointment of a receiver on the application of a subsequent mortgagee or other equitable incumbrancer.⁷

(5) Subsequent Appointment under Prior Mortgage. — The court will recognize a lien upon rents in favor of a diligent mortgagee who first obtains the appointment of a receiver, and will not disturb such lien nor compel the Crops. — It has been held that growing crops do not, if sold by the mortgagor before foreclosure proceedings begin, pass to the receiver, although still standing on the property at the time of his appointment. *Caldwell v. Priorities Between Receiver and Judgment Creditor. — Where a receiver of the rents and profits has been appointed in foreclosure proceedings, his right to such rents is superior to that of a judgment creditor of the mortgagor by judgment rendered subsequent to the appointment of the receiver. Woodyatt v. Connell, 38 Ill. App. 475.

Trust Deed Silent as to Rents. — It has been held that the beneficiaries in a trust deed acquire, by the appointment of a receiver in foreclosure proceedings, an equitable lien upon the rents of the property involved, although the deed of trust contained no specific pledge of the rents. Stephen v. Reibling, 45 Ill. App. 40.

Discretion of Court. — Where, after a bill of foreclosure was filed, and pending a motion for a receiver, the mortgagor collected certain rents accruing from the mortgaged premises, it was held that the determination whether the court would compel the mortgagor to pay such rents to the receiver after his appointment rested in the discretion of the court. Rider v. Bagley, 84 N. Y. 461.

Possession of Receiver Not to Be Disturbed. — Beverley v. Brooke, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 208.

Consent of First Mortgagee. — According to an early English case, a second mortgagee, the mortgagor living, cannot have a receiver without the consent of the first mortgagee, because the court cannot prevent the first mortgagee from bringing an ejectment against the receiver as soon as he is appointed. Phipps v. Bath, 2 Dick. 608. But according to the doctrine of a leading case in the United States, if a mortgagee having the right to possession fails to exercise such privilege, the appointment of a receiver is in the nature of an injunction which defeats the mortgagee's power of election. The court takes possession of the property by its receiver, and preserves the security for the mortgagee until his right of priority is established. Beverley v. Brooke, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 208.

7. Beverley v. Brooke, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 187.

Where Nothing Due on Mortgage. — Where a third mortgagee took possession and then bought up the first mortgagee, retaining possession for many years and receiving a considerable sum, a receiver was appointed against him on the application of the second mortgagee, the affidavit of the third mortgagee not satisfactorily showing that anything remained due on the first mortgage. Hiles v. Moore, 15 Beav. 175.

transfer of such rents already collected to a receiver subsequently appointed under a prior mortgage.¹ But a subsequent receivership under a prior mortgage will supersede the former in that such latter receiver will thereafter be entitled to the rents to the exclusion of the former.²

(6) Distinction Between Rights of First and Subsequent Mortgagee. — It has been said that the rights of a first and a subsequent mortgagee are different with respect to a receiver. The first mortgagee has the legal right to the rents and profits, and has his remedy at law by ejectment. A subsequent mortgagee has a better right to a receiver, because he has no right to the possession at law as against the prior mortgagee, and if the first mortgagee refrains from the exercise of his legal rights, there seems some propriety in the interference of a court of chancery.³

(7) Tenants Attorning to Receiver. — Where, in foreclosure proceedings, a receiver of the rents has been appointed, the tenants of the property may be compelled to attorn to him,⁴ or forfeit, at the option of the court, all interest in the mortgaged premises.⁵

m. DUTIES OF RECEIVER IN FORECLOSURE. — The ordinary duties of a receiver in a foreclosure suit are in aid of the mortgagee, by collecting the rents and preserving the property from loss and decay.⁶

VI. WHO MAY BE APPOINTED RECEIVER — 1. Impartial, Independent, and Disinterested Person. — The person appointed receiver should, as a rule, be an independent and disinterested person, and impartial and indifferent as between the parties to the controversy.⁷ "Receivers," it has been held, "ought not to be appointed to represent the peculiar interests of one class, and a fortiori they should not be appointed to represent one interest out of a class of interests."⁸ The court will not appoint a person, however well qualified in other respects, whose interest in the subject-matter of the controversy or relations with the parties might influence the administration of the trust.⁹

2. Discretion of Court as to Receiver. — It has been shown that whether a receiver will be appointed rests within the sound discretion of the court to which the application is made. This rule of discretion, it is held, extends also to the selection of a proper and fit person for the office of receiver.¹ Before appointing a person receiver the court will consider whether such person's existing engagements will permit him to give requisite attention to the receivership;² and in the appointment of a receiver for a particular species of property, the court will consider the qualifications of a suggested appointee to manage such property.³ The court will not, in general, appoint a person receiver who has been engaged in transactions either unlawful or in breach of trust.⁴

3. Relationship with Parties. — The fact that the person proposed for appointment is a near relative of either party is not of itself an absolute disqualification. Such circumstance will be considered, and will, in the discretion of the court, be given its due weight in connection with other facts.⁵ But where a receiver is appointed for the estate of an insolvent or bankrupt, for the purpose of impeaching fraudulent conveyances and discovering concealed property, it is not improper that a relative of the complainant should be appointed, with such added incentive to defeat the debtor's fraudulent acts and designs.⁶

4. Inconsistent Duties or Positions. — A person will not be appointed receiver whose duties or position, already assumed or occupied, would conflict or be inconsistent with his duties as receiver.⁷

5. Person Recommended by Applicant. — Where a receiver is appointed before the appearance or answer of adverse parties, the selection of the person to be appointed must frequently, in the first instance, be made by the chancellor on the ex parte recommendation of the party applying for the appointment.⁸

6. Agreement or Recommendation of Parties. — In the selection of a receiver the court will, as a rule, be governed by an agreement or recommendation of the parties in interest as to the person to be appointed.⁹

Secured Creditors, However, Cannot Dictate who shall be appointed receiver, for the receiver is not the representative of such creditors, but the hand of the court, and the interest of creditors of every grade will be considered in making the appointment.¹⁰ In some instances the appointment of an interested person as

Although a Previous Assignee of the Property was appointed receiver by consent of parties, it was held that a new receiver would be substituted because it seemed probable that there might be some conflict between the proper respective functions of receiver and assignee. Eichberg v. Wickham, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 21 N. Y. Supp. 647.

receiver is made by consent of parties, either to save expense or to secure the services of some one familiar with the property.¹ But where a person sustaining a particular relation to the controversy or the parties is disqualified by statute, his appointment is invalid though by consent of parties.²

7. Nonresidence of Receiver. — The nonresidence of a receiver is not a conclusive objection to his appointment where it appears that he is a fit person in other respects and interests to give the receivership his personal supervision.³

8. Consent of Appointee. — The consent of the person selected, express or implied, is necessary to the appointment of a receiver.⁴

9. Corporation as Receiver. — A corporation, when so authorized by its charter, may act as receiver.⁵

10. Creditors. — A creditor of an individual debtor or corporation is not ineligible as a receiver.⁶

11. Master or Clerk of Court. — It has been said that the master of the court should not in any case be appointed receiver, as his official duties may conflict with the performance of a receiver's functions.⁷ Nor is the clerk of the court, by virtue of his office, a receiver of the court;⁸ and a court of chancery can no more impose the office of receiver upon its clerk and master without his consent than it can upon any private individual.⁹ But in some jurisdictions it is a common practice to appoint the clerk receiver.¹⁰

12. Mortgagees. — A mortgagee of real property may be appointed receiver thereof; and where such an appointment has been made and accepted the mortgagee must be deemed to have assumed the duties and responsibilities of a receiver, unqualified by the fact that he had been declared to be a mortgagee in possession of the same property, or that he claimed to be the absolute owner thereof, and finally might be held to be such.¹¹

13. Parties. — As a general rule, a party to the cause will not be appointed receiver,¹² at least not unless particular circumstances render such a course necessary or beneficial to the trust, or the parties in interest consent thereto.¹³

1. See Steel v. Holladay, 19 Oregon 520. Compare, however, in this connection the case of Watson v. Arundel, Ir. 10 Eq. 324, in which it was held that the consent of parties cannot make a solicitor for the plaintiff capable of being receiver and thus exercising two opposite functions.

13. Special Circumstances. — In re Lloyd, 12

But the appointment of a mere nominal party, or one whose interest in the suit or subject-matter of the controversy is but nominal, is not objectionable.¹

14. Counsel or Solicitors of Parties. — Counsel or solicitors of parties to the cause will not, as a rule, be appointed receivers,² nor should an attorney of any party whose interests may conflict with the other parties in interest be employed.³ But if such attorney serves without objection, he should be allowed a reasonable compensation.⁴ An attorney, counselor, or solicitor not concerned in the cause may be appointed receiver.⁵

15. Sheriffs. — A sheriff may be appointed receiver of the property of a judgment debtor, with the same powers and authority as any other person so appointed.⁶

16. Trustees and Assignees. — It has been said that while a trustee will not ordinarily be appointed receiver of the trust estate,⁷ yet if it appears that such an appointment would be for the best interests of the estate, the rule will be departed from.⁸

Trustees in Mortgages of Real Estate are accordingly not infrequently appointed receivers.⁹

An Assignee of Property should not be appointed receiver where his duties in the former capacity would conflict with his proper functions in the latter.¹⁰

17. Receivers of Corporations — a. OFFICERS AND STOCKHOLDERS. — Officers and stockholders of corporations are not, as such, ineligible to appointment as receivers thereof.¹ But a court will not in general appoint as receiver of a corporation any one who has been officially and responsibly connected with the mismanagement of the company's affairs which has rendered necessary the appointment of a receiver,² nor will an officer of a corporation whose interests as an individual may conflict with those of the body of stockholders be appointed its receiver.³

b. SPECULATOR IN CORPORATE STOCK. — One who is a speculator in the stock of a corporation should not be appointed its receiver.⁴

18. Receivers of Partnerships. — While the general rule undoubtedly is that a receiver should be a person wholly disinterested in the subject-matter of the suit, yet where a proper case has been made out for a receivership and the partner in charge of the business is without fault, he will usually be appointed the receiver.⁵

VII. APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER — 1. Requisite Showing to Obtain. — Questions relating to the appointment of receivers have been to a large extent covered by a preceding section of this title. It is sufficient here to say that in order to obtain the appointment of a receiver the plaintiff must, as a general rule, show first, either that he has a clear right to the property itself, or that he has some lien upon it, or that the property constitutes a special fund to which he has a right to resort for the satisfaction of his claim; and second, that the possession of the property by the defendant was obtained by fraud, or that the property itself, or the income arising from it, is in danger of loss from the neglect, waste, misconduct, or insolvency of the defendant.¹

2. Effect of Delay in Applying for Receiver. — Delay on the part of one who seeks the appointment of a receiver, whether in making or prosecuting the application, will be regarded by the court as a consideration against the appointment.² So a receiver will not be appointed at the suit of a judgment creditor unless the creditor has filed his bill within a reasonable time after the return of the execution unsatisfied.³

3. Effect of Delay in Objecting to Appointment. — Where there has been unreasonable delay in objecting to the appointment of a receiver it will be held tantamount to consent to and acquiescence in the appointment, and an objection to the appointment on the ground of irregularities therein will not be entertained.⁴

4. Estoppel to Question Appointment. — One who has recognized the appointment of a receiver or the validity of his official acts cannot subsequently object to his appointment or to the validity of acts done thereunder on the ground of irregularities in the appointment.⁵ So a creditor who has accepted dividends on his claims from a receiver is estopped to deny the regularity of the appointment.⁶ Nor can a stockholder of a corporation, after having

When Refused to Creditors of Deceased Persons. — If the combined real and personal estate of a deceased person is sufficient to pay his debts, his creditors have no reason to apply to have a receiver appointed to take charge of the rents and profits of the real estate and appropriate them to the payment of such debts. *McKaig v. joined in an application made to the court by the receiver for authority to sell the assets of the corporation, be permitted to question the regularity or validity of the receiver's appointment, or of the order directing the sale.¹ But where the order of appointment is void and not voidable merely, the fact that a judgment creditor intervened in the receivership proceedings and attempted to enforce his judgment will not preclude an attack upon the appointment.²

5. Reluctance of Courts to Appoint Receivers. — It is frequently stated that the courts are very reluctant to resort to the summary remedy of receiverships.³ Some authorities have, indeed, declared that this reluctance should be overcome only by circumstances of "imperative" or "extreme" necessity,⁴ or in cases of manifest danger imminently impending.⁵ At all events, the power of appointing receivers is one which should be sparingly exercised, and with great caution and circumspection,⁶ and only where the circumstances relied upon to warrant the appointment are made to appear by clear proof.⁷ But this does not, of course, mean that the proof of the facts on which the exercise of judicial interference depends must be free from conflict.⁸ Reasonable certainty is sufficient.⁹

6. Fact that Appointment Will Do No Harm. — The appointment of a receiver will never be made merely because the measure will do no harm.¹⁰ Nor, a fortiori, will a receiver be appointed where no perceptible benefit would result therefrom, and no apparent injury from a refusal to appoint, but on the contrary there would be confusion, difficulty, and injury to all concerned if an appointment were made.¹

7. Interference with Legal Title. — The reluctance of the courts to appoint a receiver is particularly emphasized where such measure would constitute an interference with the legal title,² or with the possession of a party under apparent claim of right,³ and such reluctance may be increased where the defendant's possession has been long continued.⁴

8. Where Other Remedies Exist. — It has been said that a receiver should not be appointed where other and less summary remedies are available and would afford adequate protection, and this whether such other remedies are of a legal or an equitable nature.⁵ Nor will a receiver be appointed where the party has power to help himself.⁶

In the Case of Corporations, a receiver will not be appointed where an injunction against threatened or combined acts or conditions would suffice.⁷

9. Discretion of Court as to Appointment — a. GENERAL RULE. — The appointment of a receiver is, as a rule, a matter within the discretion of the court;⁸ not an arbitrary discretion, however, but one to be governed by sound considerations of judgment, and each case determined upon its own conditions and circumstances.¹ This rule of discretion has been but little impaired or enlarged by the various statutes on the subject, it still being within the sound discretion of the court to say when the statutory grounds for receivership exist.²

b. WHEN APPOINTMENT EX DEBITO JUSTITIÆ. — It has been said that in a very plain case where the plaintiff's right is clear, and the danger of loss apparent, the appointment of a receiver is ex debito justitiæ.³ Few cases are met with, however, in which the appointment of a receiver has been held matter of right.

Mortgage Provision for Receiver. — Where, however, a mortgage of real estate expressly provided that the mortgagee should have the right to a receiver to collect the rents after a sale and deficiency judicially ascertained, it was held error to refuse to appoint a receiver after the happening of the stated conditions.⁴

10. Irregular and Collusive Appointments. — It has been held that a receiver of a corporation appointed in a collusive suit will be considered a mere custodian introduced by the corporation,⁵ or as an agent of the corporation

Rule under English Judicature Act. — The phraseology used in the English Judicature Act of 1873, § 25, subsec. 8, that a receiver "may" be appointed when it is "just or convenient," does not deprive the court of its proper discretion to refuse a receiver asked for on behalf of a legal mortgagee who has taken possession and remained in possession for a long time, but who at the last moment declares that he will give up possession and put the mortgagors to the expense of a receivership. for whose acts the latter is liable.¹

11. Damages for Improper Appointment. — It has been held that the appointment of a receiver is an act of the court, and affords no basis for an action for damages against the applicant.²

12. Constitutional Provisions. — The power possessed by courts of equity of appointing receivers and ordering them to take possession of the property in controversy does not conflict with the constitutional provision that no man shall be deprived of his property without due process of law.³

13. Evidence of Appointment. — The proper record evidence of the appointment of a receiver is conclusive of the right of the party to act as such until it is impeached.⁴

14. Injunction and Receiver. — While injunction and receivership are separate and distinct remedies,⁵ both are frequently invoked by and resorted to upon the same state of facts,⁶ and each is sometimes spoken of as an incident of the other.⁷ In a certain sense, however, a receivership implies and includes an injunction, for, as will be more fully seen hereafter, all persons are restrained from interfering with the receiver's possession, or with the receiver in the performance of his duties.⁸ But it by no means follows, of course, that because an injunction is granted a receiver should be appointed.⁹ A receivership is frequently resorted to in order to supplement an injunction.¹⁰

VIII. EFFECT OF APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER — 1. Determines No Right. — The appointment of a receiver, being a mere provisional and precautionary remedy for the purpose of preserving property for the ultimate judgment of the court, determines no right either of parties to the controversy or of strangers thereto.¹¹ The rights of the parties concerned are disposed of by the ultimate judgment

Receiver of Corporation — Partnership. — A corporation which had never been legally organized had acquired, in payment of subscriptions to its capital stock, certain real and personal property formerly belonging to a partnership, under conveyances, part of the consideration being the undertaking of the corporation to pay certain of the partnership debts. It was held that the fact that this property came into the hands of a receiver did not constitute such receiver the receiver of the partnership, and therefore bound by its agreements. *Lamkin v. of the court, or its further action in the premises.¹ In the appointment of a receiver the court will confine itself strictly to the immediate object sought, and abstain as far as possible from prejudging any of the material questions in the cause.² It has been held, therefore, that the effect of the appointment of a receiver is not to oust any party of his right to the possession of the property, but merely to retain it for the benefit of the party who may ultimately be entitled to it; and when the party entitled to the estate has been ascertained, the receiver will be considered his receiver.³

2. Title to Property. — The appointment of a receiver effects no change in the title to the property involved as between conflicting claimants thereto or the parties to the suit.⁴ A receiver is not, as a rule, regarded as having the legal title to the property.⁵ He is a mere custodian to take charge of and hold the property during a pending litigation.⁶

3. Property in Custodia Legis. — It is well settled that property in the receiver's custody is in custodia legis, and the possession of the receiver is the possession of the court which appointed him.⁷ But a mere order that a receiver shall be appointed, before his actual appointment, does not place the property in custodia legis.¹

4. No Personal Interest in Receiver. — The receiver of property has in his official character no personal interest therein further than that arising out of his responsibility for the correct and faithful discharge of his duties.² It is therefore of no consequence to the receiver how or when or to whom the court may dispose of the funds or property in his hands provided the order or decree of the court furnishes to him a sufficient protection.³

5. Receiver's Possession Not Adverse. — The possession of the receiver is therefore not technically adverse to either party to the litigation, so as to oust or affect any right.⁴

6. Relieves Previous Holder from Further Responsibility. — Where property is taken from the custody of the defendant or the person in possession and placed in the possession of a receiver, the previous holder is, of course, relieved from further responsibility for the property.⁵

7. Appointment Creates No Lien. — The appointment of a receiver creates no lien upon the property which goes into the possession of the receiver,⁶ nor does the appointment of a receiver affect the priority of existing liens.⁷

8. No Advantage to Applicant. — The order of appointment of a receiver gives no advantage to the party applying for it, and at whose instance it is made, over other claimants of the property.⁸

9. Priorities After Appointment. — After the appointment of a receiver and the taking possession of the property by him, there is a suspension of the right to obtain priority out of the property by voluntary conveyance, or by assignment, attachment, or other process.⁹ And after the appointment of a receiver a creditor within the jurisdiction of the appointing court may be restrained from obtaining a lien in the property of the debtor, though in another jurisdiction.¹⁰

10. Statute of Limitations. — It has been held that the appointment of a receiver does not in any manner affect the running of the statute of limitations;¹¹ nor will a payment made by a receiver to one of the parties in a cause, out of funds collected in his receivership, be regarded as such a payment by the debtor as will amount to an acknowledgment of the debt and so take the case out of the statute.¹ But where, in the order of appointment, there is an injunction against suits, the time during which such injunction is in operation will be excluded.²

11. Pending Suits.—The mere appointment of a receiver does not of necessity abate pending suits, either by or against the individual or corporation for whose property the receiver is appointed.³ But in the case of corporations it has been held that while the appointment of a receiver does not abate actions pending against the corporate body, such appointment operates as a suspension of the right of the corporation to prosecute actions in which it is plaintiff.⁴

Where Corporation Dissolved.—Where, in addition to the appointment of a receiver, the corporation is dissolved, all pending suits by or against the corporation abate, in the absence of a statute to the contrary.⁵

also enjoins the corporation from the exercise of its powers and franchises.¹ Notwithstanding the appointment of a receiver the corporation still exists and may exercise any of its franchises, if it does not thereby interfere with the rightful management of its affairs by the receiver, in the exercise of his duties as defined by the court appointing him.²

b. CORPORATE FUNCTIONS AND POWERS — (1) In General. — The appointment of a receiver for a corporation gives to the receiver the temporary management of its affairs under the direction of the court;³ and it has been held that the power of the court to assume control and management of the corporate affairs necessarily includes the power to collect, marshal, and distribute the corporate assets.⁴ But a corporation is deprived of the right to exercise its corporate powers by the appointment of a receiver, only so far as the statute or the decree of the court transfers such powers to the receiver. If the corporation is enjoined from exercising any of its franchises, of course its corporate activity in such respects ceases; but if the receiver has conferred upon him only a portion of the corporate powers, then, if not otherwise decreed, the corporation may exercise the remaining powers conferred upon it by its charter.⁵

(2) Statutory Duties. — While, as has been seen, a corporation is not dissolved by the appointment of a receiver, it may thereby be relieved from the performance of certain statutory duties, such as the requirement for annual reports by the trustees or directors.⁶

c. CORPORATE PROPERTY — (1) In General. — When a receiver of a corporation is appointed he becomes, as a rule, entitled to the custody and control of the property of the company.⁷ It has been held that a decree

When Receivers Not Entitled to Possession. — The receivers of an insolvent life-insurance company are not entitled to the possession and control of securities deposited by the company, before its insolvency, with the state treasurer, appointing a receiver for a corporation vests in him the title to the corporate personal property, but not the real estate, with the title to which the receiver becomes clothed only by formal conveyance.¹

(2) Trust Fund Doctrine. — After the dissolution or insolvency of a corporation, all of its property is, according to the doctrine of modern cases, considered a trust fund to be held for the benefit of creditors and shareholders. When, therefore, a receiver is appointed after dissolution, all of the property vests in him as trustee for all persons entitled to share in its distribution.² But where a statute provides that the directors or managers of a corporation at the time of its dissolution shall be trustees of the creditors and stockholders, the trustees become vested with title to the corporate property and the receiver takes no title.³

d. CORPORATE CONTRACTS — (1) In General. — The appointment of a receiver for a corporation does not terminate existing contracts in the sense that there is no liability of the corporate assets for a breach thereof,⁴ though, as will be seen more fully in another place, a receiver is not bound to adopt and carry out existing contracts unless he deems it for the benefit of his trust.⁵ A corporation may, therefore, after the appointment of a receiver, be sued for damages caused by its failure to carry out the provisions of a lease.⁶ But it has been held that where the performance of a contract by a corporation is prevented solely by the appointment of a receiver and an injunction against interference with the corporate business and property, damages are not recoverable against the corporation for the nonperformance, the breach of contract in such case being damnum absque injuria.⁷

(2) Building and Loan Associations. — In the case of a building and loan association it has been held that the appointment of a receiver terminates the liability of the stockholders for the monthly payments on their stock,⁸ at the same time causing the debts due to the association by borrowing members and the mortgage securities to mature.⁹

e. RECEIVERS' CONTRACTS. — In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, a corporation is not liable for the contracts or acts of the receiver, or his agents or subordinates, in the management of the company's business.¹⁰

f. TORTS OF RECEIVER. — A corporation is not, in general, liable for the in compliance with a state statute, but the receivers are entitled to the income and dividends from the securities while they remain in the hands of the treasurer. Cooke v. Warner, 56 Conn. 234, 22 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 662.

torts of its receiver, or his servants or agents, committed in the management of the corporate affairs or property.¹

g. OFFENSES OF RECEIVER'S SERVANTS. — A corporation in the hands of a receiver cannot be prosecuted for the criminal offenses of the agents or servants of the receiver, the latter having full possession of its property and entire charge of its affairs.²

h. ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST CORPORATIONS. — The appointment of a receiver for a corporation does not necessarily affect its right subsequently to sue for injuries to its property or in the enforcement of its corporate rights.³ Nor does the mere appointment of a receiver for a corporation, in the absence of any injunction against suits, prevent the subsequent institution of an action against the corporation,⁴ or prevent the subsequent recovery of judgments against the corporation on valid claims.⁵

i. PROCEEDINGS AGAINST DIRECTORS. — The fact that the affairs of a corporation have been placed in the hands of a receiver does not take away or suspend a creditor's right of action against the directors.⁶

13. Partnerships — a. NOT AN ADJUDICATION OF RIGHTS. — Pursuant to the general rule elsewhere stated that the appointment of a receiver is a mere provisional remedy, determining no material elements of the controversy, it has been held that the appointment of a receiver of a partnership is not an adjudication of the allegations of the petition under which the appointment was made as to the rights of creditors and parties.⁷

b. AS DISSOLUTION OF FIRM. — The appointment of a receiver in an action between partners has been held, in effect, a practical termination and dissolution of the partnership.⁸

Where Appointment Collusive. — The appointment of a receiver for a corporation does not prevent a proceeding by a creditor to subject the corporate property to the payment of his claim where the appointment of the receiver was collusive and with the connivance of the officers and some of the stockholders of the corporation, for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding creditors. *The Coliseum v. Property of Firm in Custody of Individual Partner. — Ferguson v. Bruckman, 23 N. Y. App. Div. 182.

Money in Bank. — A receiver for a partner-has no power or jurisdiction over the individual property of the partners.¹

d. PREFERENCES. — The appointment of a receiver for a partnership will prevent a creditor who obtains judgment after the appointment from having or obtaining any lien which would give preference over other partnership creditors.²

e. SALE OF INTEREST BY PARTNER. — The fact that partnership property is in the hands of a receiver pending a suit for dissolution of the partnership and for an accounting does not prevent the sale by one of the partners of his interest in the partnership property.³ But one who purchases the interest of a partner after a receiver of the firm's assets is appointed cannot interfere with the property in the possession of the receiver.⁴

IX. FOR WHAT PROPERTY RECEIVER APPOINTED — 1. In General. — It has been said that every kind of property of such a nature that if legal it might be taken in execution may if equitable be put into the receiver's possession.⁵

2. Portion Only of Defendant's Property. — The courts may and frequently do appoint receivers for a portion only of a defendant's property.⁶ But it has been held that a statute relating to the appointment of receivers for insolvent corporations did not contemplate the administration of less than the whole of the corporate property for the payment of the corporate debts.⁷

3. Equitable Property. — A receivership may include equitable assets and property as well as that to which the title is cognizable at law.⁸

4. Incorporeal Property. — Receivers may be appointed over incorporeal as well as over corporeal property, such as the profits of a clerical office,⁹ or returns of an ecclesiastical character,¹⁰ like those of a rectory,¹¹ or the right to tolls of various kinds.¹² But a court cannot, as a provisional remedy, appoint a receiver of a market stand in a city market, as a permit to occupy stalls in such a market does not constitute property, and confers upon its holder no right or interest cognizable in the courts.¹

5. Personal Property. — Personal chattels may of course be placed in charge of a receiver.²

6. Debts. — Debts due to the individual or the corporation for whose property a receiver is appointed are assets which pass to the receiver.³ So debts due from the individual members of a partnership, like other debts due to the firm, become assets in the hands of a receiver, and should be collected and applied to the payment of firm debts accordingly.⁴

7. Incomes and Annuities. — A receiver of incomes and annuities may be appointed as well as a receiver of the property on which they are charged.⁵ But a receiver will not be appointed where there is ample remedy, by distress or otherwise, to collect the arrears of annuity.⁶

8. Taxes and Rates. — A receiver cannot be appointed to collect taxes levied by a municipal or quasi-municipal corporation;⁷ nor does the fact that the remedy at law by mandamus for levying and collecting taxes has proved ineffectual, or that there is no person willing to accept the office of collector of taxes, change the rule.⁸ Similarly, a court of equity will not appoint a receiver of rates which are to be assessed by commissioners and collected at a future period;⁹ nor will a receiver be appointed over rates upon the security whereof a municipal corporation has been authorized to borrow money.¹⁰

9. Rents and Profits — a. IN GENERAL. — Where, pending litigation in which real property is involved, it appears that unless a receiver is appointed the current rents and profits of such realty will probably be lost to the party properly entitled thereto, a receiver of such rents and profits will be appointed.¹¹

Party Restrained by Injunction. — Atlas Sav., etc., Assoc. v. Kirklin, 110 Ga. 572.

The principal duty, indeed, which a receiver of real estate is required to perform is, as a rule, to collect the rents and profits of the land. To enable him to perform this duty where the real estate is under lease, an order of court requiring the tenants to pay their rent to the receiver may be made.¹

In a Proceeding for Apportionment of Dower, if it appears that the person in possession is insolvent and that there is risk of the rents and profits being lost, a receiver will be appointed.²

Where an Equitable Incumbrancer or a Creditor obtains a decree for the sale of real estate, or shows by his bill a clear case entitling him to enforce his claim out of real estate, he may be protected, as to the rents and profits accruing during the litigation, by the appointment of a receiver.³ But a husband who expends money upon his wife's realty will not be entitled to a receiver of the rents and profits to enforce his claim for a repayment of the money.⁴

Where an Annuity Charged on Land is in arrears and the property is an insufficient security for its payment, a receiver of rents and profits may be appointed.⁵

But Where a Person Is Clothed with Title and Possession under a lease, and is in the enjoyment of rights apparently legal, a receiver will not be appointed unless the plaintiff shows a clear right, with such attending circumstances of danger to the rents and profits as will move the conscience of a chancellor to interfere.¹

b. COLLECTION OF RENTS IN ARREAR. — It has been held that a receiver may ordinarily distrain for rents in arrear without a special order of court. If, however, the arrears are for more than a year, or there is a question as to who is entitled to the rent, an order of court should be obtained.²

10. Public Offices. — A court of equity has no power to appoint a receiver of the fees and emoluments of a public office to discharge the duties and functions thereof pending a contest between rival claimants of the office, the contest being based upon alleged illegality of election or appointment.³ But receivers of the profits of public offices have been appointed,⁴ though the reverse would be the rule where the emoluments of a public office were exempt by law.⁵

11. Real Property — a. IN GENERAL. — A receiver of real property may, of course, be appointed in a proper case shown.⁶

The Object of the Appointment of a Receiver of Real Estate is not to determine in limine the question of possession as between adverse claimants, but merely to preserve the status quo pending the litigation, and for that purpose to take such precautionary measures as may be necessary.⁷

Conflicting Claims to Public Lands. — A receiver may be appointed for public lands claimed by two parties under the mining laws of the United States, in order that the proper steps may be taken to perfect the claim for the benefit of the party entitled thereto, where the proof shows that the complainant has reasonable ground for his claim of ownership.⁸

b. REQUISITES TO APPOINTMENT. — A court of equity will appoint a receiver over real estate, pending litigation as to title, only where it appears, first, that the plaintiff has a reasonable probability of establishing his title, and second; that there is imminent danger of the rents and profits of the land being lost or squandered by the person in possession. Both of these conditions must appear or the court will refuse the application.¹

c. ACTIONS FOR SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. — Upon a bill in equity to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate, a receiver may be appointed if it appears that the vendee is insolvent and that he is about to assign or convey the property the conveyance of which is desired.²

d. ACTIONS FOR RESCISSION. — A receiver may be appointed in an action to regain possession of money and securities given for land, brought by a vendee of land who has repudiated his purchase because of the vendor's fraud.³

e. ACTION BY VENDOR FOR PURCHASE MONEY. — In a suit for a recovery of the purchase price, brought by the vendor in a contract for the sale of land, where the vendee is insolvent, is in possession, has committed waste, and threatens material injury to the property, an injunction and receiver are proper.⁴

f. DISTURBANCE OF LEGAL TITLE OR POSSESSION — (1) General Rule. — A court of equity proceeds with extreme reluctance and caution in disturbing the legal possession of real estate by the appointment of a receiver.⁵ This is particularly true where possession is held by a third person not a party to the proceedings.⁶ But a court of equity will appoint a receiver of real property, even against a party having possession under the legal title, if it is satisfied that such party has wrongfully obtained that interest in the property.⁷ So a receiver of land in possession of an heir at law will be appointed at the instance of a devisee, where the latter satisfies the court that there is a reasonable probability of his succeeding on the issue, and that the property will be endangered by being left in the possession of the heir at law.⁸

(2) In Aid of Ejectments. — A court of equity will not, except in extreme cases, interfere to appoint a receiver pending an action of ejectment. If,

5. Rights of Claimant of Realty Out of Possession. — As to real estate, the doctrine seems to be, according to another statement of the rule on the subject, that a court of equity will not interfere by the appointment of a receiver to take the property from the party in possession, on the application of a party out of possession, claiming a dry legal title only, but will leave him to his remedy at law. Mapes v. Scott, 4 Ill. App. 270. And see Talbot v. Scott, 4 Kay & J. 111. It is only in cases where some special circumstances arise of an equitable nature, and in aid of an equitable title, that the court will appoint a receiver over real estate in behalf of a claimant out of possession. Mapes v. Scott, 4 Ill. App. 271. See Talbot v. Scott, 4 Kay & J. 112; Carrow v. Farrior, L. R. 3 Ch. 728; Schlecht's Appeal, 60 Pa. St. 176. But see as to the present English rule under the Judicature Act, Berry v. Keen, 51 L. J. Ch. 912.

In an action to recover land claimed by the plaintiff and in the possession of the defendant, together with damages and rents, a mere showing that the defendant is renting the premises and collecting the rents, that the premises are mortgaged, and that the plaintiff is in need of the rents to pay interest on the mortgage, does not show sufficient equitable grounds for the appointment of a receiver. State v. District Ct., 13 Mont. 416.

however, the plaintiff shows a prima facie case, and at the same time it appears that the defendant in possession is insolvent or is mismanaging the property, and that the rents and profits are in peril, the court may at its discretion interfere and appoint a receiver for the protection of the property.¹

(3) Appointment to Enforce Equitable Claim. — As a general rule, in making an appointment of a receiver on behalf of a party seeking to enforce an equitable claim against real estate, or a claim which is the subject of equitable jurisdiction, the court will take care not to interfere with the rights of a person holding a prior legal interest in the property.²

g. WHERE ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW. — The general rule that equity will not interfere where there is an adequate remedy at law is strictly applied in cases involving receiverships of real property.³ So a receiver will not be appointed on behalf of an heir at law against a devisee unless there are strong circumstances to induce such appointment, as the heir has his remedy at law by bringing ejectment.⁴

regarded as standing upon a peculiar footing in this respect, because of the loss and depreciation which result from an interruption of operations.¹

13. Trust Property. — It has been shown that a receiver may be appointed for trust funds or property where there is no trustee, or where the trustee removes, absconds, or abuses the trust.² It has been held, however, that a receiver cannot reach a trust fund where the trust is to receive rents and profits and apply them to the use of the beneficiary, but that the creditor must himself proceed in equity therefor. But the rule is different where the trust is merely to convert and distribute.³ A receiver will not, at the instance of a creditor, be appointed for trust property or the income thereof unless such property or its income can be subjected to the debts of the beneficiary.⁴

14. Joint Property — a. IN GENERAL. — It has been held that a receiver should not be appointed for property owned by a debtor jointly with others unless the equities of the case clearly demand it.⁵ So a court of equity will not, at the instance of one tenant in common, wrest from another cotenant his share of the property, to the enjoyment of which he is legally entitled, unless such action is necessary to secure and protect the rights of the complaining cotenant.⁶

b. EXCLUSION FROM PARTICIPATION. — A court of equity has, however, power to appoint a receiver, upon the ground of the inadequacy of the remedy at law, at the instance of one tenant in common against his cotenants, when such cotenants are insolvent, are in possession of undivided valuable property, receiving the whole of the rents and profits, and exclude their associate from the receipt of any portion thereof;⁷ a rule held particularly applicable where the common property consists of mines or timber lands.¹

In Suits Between Co-owners of Mines, it has been said that receivers would be appointed on much the same grounds and under the same circumstances as in actions between partners.²

c. PENDING ACTION FOR PARTITION. — It is also competent for a court of equity, in some cases, to appoint a receiver in a partition suit.³ It has been shown that the exclusion of a cotenant from all participation in property rights is a ground for the appointment of a receiver of joint property;⁴ but a mere colorable ouster, and the fact that the care of the property involves considerable expense, will not warrant the appointment of a receiver in a partition suit.⁵

Where, however, two persons are owners or tenants in common of a mine and have agreed to work it together, the court will not appoint a manager and receiver of the mine on a bill not asking for a dissolution of the partnership, where one of the tenants in common has taken no steps to obstruct the other. X. RELATION OF RECEIVER TO COURT — 1. General Rule. — The rule is well settled that a receiver is to be regarded as the arm, officer, or representative of the court appointing him.¹ The custody of the receiver is, as has already been seen, the custody of the court appointing him;² his acts and possession are the acts and possession of the court;³ and his contracts and liabilities are, in contemplation of law, the contracts and liabilities of the court.⁴

Depository of Receiver's Funds. — It has been intimated that a bank designated by the court as a depository of funds coming into the hands of receivers appointed by the court becomes, by acceptance of the deposit, in a sense an officer of the court, and that, furthermore, such bank or its officers might be liable as for contempt for misconduct in the use or appropriation of such funds.⁵

Qualification of Rule. — But it has been well said that while a receiver is, in a general sense, the representative of the court, he has also certain obligations to the parties owning or interested in the property in his custody, and certain rights and powers with reference thereto, to be exercised independently of the court, as by appeal from certain judgments affecting his personal rights or the rights of the parties, though rendered in the court of his appointment and from which his official authority is derived. Bosworth v. St. Louis Terminal R. Assoc., 174 U. S. 182.

Receiver's Reports Prima Facie Correct. — As a receiver is an officer of the court of his appointment, it has been held that the verification of his report is prima facie evidence of its correctness, that it is entitled to the same consideration as the return of any other officer of the court, and that to be impeached it must be overcome by other competent evidence. State v. Nebraska Sav., etc., Bank, 61 Neb. 496.

But though this was conceded, it has been held that it would not follow that every servant or agent of the bank should be considered pro hac vice an officer of the court, and amen-

from the court whose creation he is, so at every step he is subject to the control and supervision of such court in his management of the property or funds placed in his charge.¹

Effect of Appeal and Supersedeas. — Though the order appointing the receiver has been appealed from and a supersedeas granted, the court has power, pending the appeal, to make all proper orders for the conservation of the property or funds in the receiver's hands.²

3. Protection of Receiver — a. IN GENERAL. — It is the duty of the court to protect the possession of its receiver, and to prevent all interference with him in the performance of his official functions and duties.³ It is, indeed, an incident of the power of appointment of a receiver to protect his possession

Sale by Third Person of Property in Hands of Receiver. — A sale by a third person of property in the hands of a receiver is invalid when it is in derogation of the receiver's right of possession and of the authority of the court appointing him. Hitz v. Jenks, 16 App. Cas. (D. C.) 530.

Federal Receiver — Illegality of State Tax. — So where a receiver appointed by a federal and to prevent interference therewith,¹ and it has been held that the power of a federal court to protect the possession of its receiver is entirely independent of the amount involved, or the citizenship of the parties, or the existence of any new ground of equitable jurisdiction.²

Where Appointment Without Prejudice. — The doctrine that the possession of a receiver is not to be disturbed without leave of court extends even to cases in which he has been appointed expressly without prejudice to the rights of persons having prior legal or equitable interests.³

Personal Violence. — Any violence offered to the person of the receiver while in discharge of his official duties is a contempt of court.⁴

b. LEAVE TO CLAIMANT TO ASSERT RIGHT. — The court will not allow the possession of its receiver to be interfered with or disturbed by any one, whether claiming paramount to or under the right which the receiver was appointed to protect. One who thinks that he has a right paramount to that of the receiver must, before he presumes to take any steps of his own motion, apply to the court for leave to assert his right against the receiver.⁵

c. INJUNCTION TO PROTECT RECEIVER'S POSSESSION. — In order to protect a receiver in his possession of and control over the fund or property, the court appointing him will grant an injunction restraining adverse claimants from unauthorized interference by suit or otherwise, and compel them to assert their rights in the forum in which the receiver was appointed.⁶

d. ATTACHMENT. — In a proper case the court may interfere by attachment to protect or enforce the receiver's rights.⁷

e. EXTENT AND LIMITS OF RULE OF PROTECTION. — The decree of a court of chancery appointing a receiver entitles him to its protection only in the possession of property of which he is authorized or directed by the decree to take possession. When he assumes to take or hold property not embraced court believes a state tax levied on property in his hands to be illegal, he should apply for protection to the court appointing him. Ex p. Chamberlain, 55 Fed. Rep. 704.

So where the alleged interference consists in entering upon land in the possession of a receiver, or in bringing an action at law against him or against a party over whose property he has been appointed, the course of the court is to restrain by injunction the party in contempt from trespassing or from prosecuting the action, as the case may be. Johnes v. Claughton, Jac. 573; Aston v. Heron, 2 Myl. & K. 390; Tink v. Rundle, 10 Beav. 318; Ames v. Birkenhead Docks, 20 Beav. 354; Bayly v. Went, 51 L. T. N. S. 765; *Evelyn v. in the decree appointing him, and to which the debtor never had any title, he is not acting as the officer or representative of the court of chancery, but is a mere trespasser, and the rightful owner of the property may sue him in any appropriate form of action for damages, or to recover possession of property illegally taken or detained.¹ So where property is in the possession of a third party under a claim of title, the court will not protect the officer who attempts to obtain possession by violence any further than the law will protect him, his right to take possession of property of which he has been appointed receiver being unquestioned.²

4. Power of Court to Protect Third Persons. — The court appointing a receiver has jurisdiction which it will readily exercise to protect third persons against an abuse of power on the part of the receiver, attempted to be exercised under pretense of authority derived from the court.³

5. Interference with Receiver as Contempt of Court — a. GENERAL RULE. — It is well settled that any unauthorized interference with a receiver's possession of the property committed to his charge, or with the receiver in the discharge of his official duties, is a contempt of the court by which he was appointed.⁴

Refusal to Surrender Property. — A defendant who has been ordered to surrender all his property to a receiver is guilty of contempt if he refuses to do so.⁵

Exclusive Right of Manufacture. — Where the exclusive right to manufacture certain patented articles was vested in the receiver of a corporation, it was held that the manufacture of such articles by the former presiding officer of the corporation was such an interference with the receiver's rights as to constitute a contempt of court. Matter of Woven Tape Skirt Co., 12 Hun (N. Y.) 111.

Possession by Adverse Claimants. — If third parties claiming adversely obtain possession of property which has gone into the hands of a receiver without consent of the appointing court, it is a contempt for which they may be punished by such tribunal. O'Mahoney v. Belmont, 62 N. Y. 133.

But a Mere Formal Levy of Execution upon a particular interest in real estate in the receiver's possession, followed by a sale thereof subject to the claims of the receiver and other persons, is not such a disturbance of the receiver's possession as amounts to a contempt. Albany City Bank v. Schermerhorn, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 263.

Demand. — But one who holds notes which he has been ordered to deliver to a receiver is not guilty of contempt in refusing to deliver them to the plaintiff or to the receiver's attorney when the receiver himself has not demanded the notes. Panton v. Zebley, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Spec. T.) 19 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 394.

Purchaser of Property at Sheriff's Sale. — Nor is a purchaser of property of the defendant at a sheriff's sale guilty of contempt for refusing to turn such property over to the receiver if such purchaser has not been made a party, nor had an opportunity of asserting his rights before the court. Robeson v. Ford, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 441.

Seizure for State Taxes. — The rule that interference with a receiver's possession is a contempt of court is applicable to a case of the seizure of such property to enforce the payment of state taxes.¹

b. PROPERTY NOT ACTUALLY IN RECEIVER'S POSSESSION. — A party may be liable in contempt although the property interfered with is not actually in the hands of the receiver. The court will not permit any one, without its sanction and authority, to interrupt or prevent the delivery of or payment for any property which the receiver has been appointed to receive, though it may not be actually in his possession.² This rule applies to rents and tolls which the receiver was appointed to receive, any interference with their collection being a contempt.³ So it is a contempt of court if one removes property which has been ordered into the possession of the receiver, although the decree or order has not been formally prepared and entered.⁴

c. PROPERTY BEYOND JURISDICTION OF COURT. — Where a receiver has been appointed for an insolvent corporation, it is a contempt of court for creditors within the jurisdiction of the appointing court to attach property of the corporation, though such property may be without the jurisdiction of the court.⁵

d. NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT. — Although a party must have some knowledge of the receivership to render him in contempt for interfering with a receiver's possession, or with the receiver in the performance of his duties, formal or written notice is not necessary. Any actual knowledge will suffice.⁶

e. WHERE APPOINTMENT IRREGULAR OR ERRONEOUS. — It is immaterial that the order appointing a receiver is irregular or erroneous, since it is not an excuse for interference with the possession of a receiver that the order appointing him ought not to have been made. That it is a subsisting order is sufficient.⁷

f. ADVICE OF COUNSEL AS DEFENSE. — The advice of counsel is no defense to proceedings for contempt in violating an order of court placing certain property in the possession of a receiver.⁸ It has been held, indeed, that counsel who advise an interference with the possession of a receiver may themselves be guilty of contempt.⁹

g. PUNISHMENT FOR CONTEMPT. — The receiver himself has no power to adjudge a party to be in contempt. Only the court which appointed him can entertain a proceeding to punish for contempt in interference with his possession.¹⁰ are usually contained in the order appointing him.¹ He is also entitled to the advice of the court in particular circumstances when in doubt as to the proper conduct of the receivership affairs, for which purpose he should make application to the court.²

7. Responsibility of Receiver to Court.—A receiver is directly responsible to the court by which he was appointed, and is accountable in such manner, or to such persons, as the court may direct.³ So a receiver is liable to punishment for contempt for the violation of an order of the court of his appointment made in the cause,⁴ but not, it has been held, for disobedience to an order directing him to pay a judgment against him where such order was not made in the action in which he was appointed.⁵ Where the bill upon which the receiver was appointed was dismissed for want of equity, it was held that his functions ceased inter partes, but that his amenability to the court, as an officer thereof, continued, the fund which had come into his hands remaining subject to the orders of the court.⁶

8. Accounting by Receiver—a. IN GENERAL.—The court from which a receiver derives his authority, and under the direction of which he acts, may in its discretion require him to account at any time.⁷ No other tribunal than the appointing court has jurisdiction to require him to account,⁸ but a

Effect of Advice or Instructions to Receiver.—If there are parties in interest and they have their day in court the advice may be decisive and binding on all parties concerned; but if the matter is ex parte such advice is binding only on the receiver, "for the judge may change his mind on hearing full argument." Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 31 Fed. Rep. 862.

Premature Instructions.—It has been held, however, that a receiver will not be instructed as to the distribution of funds until he has them in court. Strauss v. Carolina Inter State Bldg., etc., Assoc., 117 N. Car. 308, 53 Am. St. Rep. 585.

Delay in Accounting by Consent of Parties.—A delay in accounting on the part of a receiver may be justifiable when he has received the consent of all parties interested, provided they are competent to consent; but it is otherwise if some are under disability, as in the case of minors. Dease v. O'Reilly, 2 Con. & Law 441, 4 Dr. & War. 284; Hooper v. Winston, 24 Ill. 365.

Irregular or Void Appointment.—A receiver will be held to a strict accountability, notwithstanding the order appointing him is void. It is enough that he claims to act and does act as such; he is receiver de facto for the time being, and cannot avail himself of an irregular or void appointment under which he has acted, procured by his own instrumentality, and thus escape an accounting for the moneys which come into his hands. O'Mahoney v. Belmont, 62 N. Y. 133.

When Not Required to Account.—A receiver for a corporation will not be required to account where it appears that no assets of the corporation have come into his hands. Lyons v. Atlanta Hill Gold Min., etc., Co., (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 14 N. Y. Supp. 533.

Rents Collected Before Receivership.—The court appointing a receiver in partition proceedings has no power to require him to account for rents received before his appointment under a bond conditioned for the payment of rents collected by him for other parties interested. Baker v. Baker, 36 N. Y. App. Div. 485.

8. What Court May Require Accounting.—Hinckley v. Gilman, etc., R. Co., 100 U. S. 153; Conkling v. Butler, 4 Biss. (U. S.) 22;

receiver in a suit in a state court which is afterwards removed to a United States court may be required to account by the latter court.¹

If the Receiver Misappropriates the Property in his hands, relief may be had against him at any time, it not being necessary that the parties interested should wait until he files his account.²

Jury Not to Pass upon Accounts. — It has been held that a receiver, being an officer of the court, is not entitled to have a jury pass upon his accounts.³

b. ACCOUNTING BY EXECUTOR OF DECEASED RECEIVER. — It has been held that the court has no jurisdiction to order, in a summary way, the executor of a deceased receiver to bring in and pass his testator's accounts, and to pay the balance to be found due out of the assets.⁴

9. When Jurisdiction of Court Ends. — The jurisdiction of the court over a receiver ends with the latter's discharge and the return of the property.⁵ But though an order of court with reference to the distribution of the fund in the receiver's hands is final, the court still has jurisdiction over the receiver to compel his obedience to the order.⁶

XI. FUNCTIONS, POWERS, AND DUTIES — 1. General Rule. — It has been said that "the scope of the receiver's duty is purely administrative."⁷ Such functional, however, occupies a fiduciary relation, and the utmost good faith is required of him in his dealing with the trust property.⁸

Protection of Property. — The primary duty of a receiver is to protect the property intrusted to him to the best of his ability for all the interests involved.⁹

Must Act Impartially. — It is also incumbent upon a receiver to act impartially between the parties to the controversy, and not to espouse the cause or interests of one party against another.¹⁰

Tendency Towards Enlargement of Scope. — In recent years, both in England and in the United States, there has been a tendency towards enlarging the scope of receiverships.¹¹

4. Executor of Deceased Receiver. — Jenkins v. Briant, 7 Sim. 171.

But where one of the receivers of an insolvent corporation dies during the pendency of proceedings for an accounting, the court may order the accounting revived and continued against the executors, and compel them to become parties to the proceedings and to abide by such orders and decrees as may be made therein. Mich. 487; People v. Security L. Ins., etc., Co., 79 N. Y. 267; People v. Family Fund Soc., 31 N. Y. App. Div. 166; Lottimer v. Lord, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 183; In re Fifty-Four First Mortg. Bonds, 15 S. Car. 314; Gadsden v. Whaley, 14 S. Car. 210. See also Detroit First Nat. Bank v. E. T. Barnum Wire, etc., Works, 58 Mich. 315; Matter of Van Allen, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 230; Holbrook v. American F. Ins. Co., 6 Paige (N. Y.) 220.

Or, as the Rule Has Been Stated: "No preferences are to be shown, no practices tolerated that will give advantage to one class of creditors to the detriment of another class, but the whole business is to be managed on the basis of the broadest equity." In re Fifty-Four First Mortg. Bonds, 15 S. Car. 315.

Promotion of Scheme for Reorganization of Corporation. — A receiver of a corporation may promote a scheme for reorganization which is best for the interests of all concerned, but not a plan which is for the benefit of one set of interests at the expense of others. Clarke v. Central R., etc., Co., 66 Fed. Rep. 16.

Dealing with Party. — But though a receiver must, as an officer of the court, stand impartial as between the parties, he is not thereby prohibited from dealing with a party if the party so dealt with is not thereby permitted to obtain any advantage over the others. Patterson v. Ward, 6 N. Dak. 600.

11. "In the progress and growth of equity jurisdiction it has become usual to clothe such officers with much larger powers than were formerly conferred." Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 219.

Receiver to Wind Up Business. — A receiver appointed for a business conducted by an individual, partnership, or corporation, must, as a rule, act with a view to winding up the business, and not to its indefinite continuance;¹ though whether a court of equity can lawfully embark in industrial enterprises property taken possession of by its receiver depends upon how far such course may be necessary to the preservation of the existing status, considering the character of the property, the uses to which it is applicable, and to what extent its use in some manner is necessary to its preservation.² Such a course can be justified only when it is absolutely necessary to the preservation of the rights of the parties, it being borne in mind that preservation of the property is the purpose for which a receiver is primarily appointed.³

2. Authority Derived from Court. — Receivers whose powers are not defined by statute derive their authority solely from the order of the court by which they were appointed, and have only such powers as the court may deem proper to bestow upon them.⁴ The limits of such powers must not be

Action for Removal of Trustee. — A court of chancery, in an action for the removal of a trustee for creditors of a private corporation, should not appoint a receiver for the purpose of indefinitely continuing the business of the corporation until the creditors are paid out of the income, but only to hold pendente lite for the removal of the trustee. *Etowah Min. To Conduct Hotel Business. — In an action to foreclose a mortgage upon the furniture and effects of a hotel, the receiver appointed may be authorized to carry on the business and to borrow money for that purpose, where the temporary closing of the hotel would probably result in serious loss to the good will of its business. Cake v. Mohun, 164 U. S. 311.

3. Bigbee v. Summerour, 101 Ga. 201.

Damages for Loss of Profits While in Receiver's Hands. — In an action on an injunction bond, the injunction having been to restrain a certain corporation from doing business, damages may be recovered as for profits lost and sales prevented during the time the corporation was in the hands of a receiver, although the order of appointment did not expressly authorize the receiver to carry on the business of the corporation. Steel v. Gordon, 14 Wash. 521.

Virginia. — Karn v. Rorer Iron Co., 86 Va. 754.

Act of Parties Procuring Appointment. — It is well settled that a receiver does not derive his authority from the act of the parties at whose suggestion or by whose consent he is appointed. Quincy, etc., R. Co. v. Humphreys, 145 U. S. 82; Union Bank v. Kansas City Bank, 136 U. S. 223; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Oregon Pac. R. Co., 31 Oregon 237, 65 Am. St. Rep. 822.

The Duty of Notifying Members of a Beneficial Association of Assessments for death losses may, after a receiver has been appointed, be conferred upon him by the court. Clark v. Lehman, 65 Ill. App. 238.

Suit on Official Bond. — The receiver of an insolvent debtor, appointed at the suit of the creditors, with authority merely to collect and distribute the assets of the insolvent, cannot enforce against the debtor and his sureties the penalty of an official bond executed by them. State v. Sullivan, 120 Ind. 197.

The Receiver of an Insolvent Moneyed Corporation, it has been held, has all the powers and authority conferred by law upon the trustees of insolvent debtors and is subject to all the duties and obligations imposed upon them. Matter of Van Allen, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 225.

Distinction Between Permanent and Temporary Receivers. — Receivers appointed pendente lite are mere temporary officers of the court, and do not possess the powers of a permanent receiver unless specially conferred upon them by order of the court. Decker v. Gardner, 124 exceeded,¹ nor can a receiver, of course, assume powers or risks not within the grant or control of the court whose agent he is.²

Where an Unusual or Extraordinary Power is claimed for a receiver it should appear in express terms or by necessary implication from the order of his appointment or some subsequent order of court.³

Unauthorized Payments — Statute of Limitations. — Payments made by a receiver which were not authorized by the order appointing him do not, it has been held, take the case out of the statute of limitations.⁴

3. Ratification of Receiver's Acts by Court. — While a receiver should, as a rule, take no step in the conduct of his trust without the general or special authority, express or implied, of the court of his appointment, yet where the receiver acts bona fide without such authority, and such act redounds to the benefit of the estate in his hands, it will, in general, be ratified and approved by the court.⁵

Test of Ratification. — Perhaps the soundest test of what unauthorized acts of a receiver will or will not be ratified by the court is whether the court would have specially authorized the act if applied to in advance.⁶

4. Receiver May Not Deny His Own Authority. — A receiver will not, as a rule, be heard to deny his own authority to do any act performed by him.⁷

5. Discretionary Power. — Receivers have a certain amount of discretionary power in the management and control of the property intrusted to their care. If they exercise this discretion carefully, and in good faith, they will be sustained by the court.⁸ The extent of discretion which a receiver has depends mainly on the circumstances of the case. That is, where a receiver is appointed to conduct a business, many of its details must of necessity be left to his discretion, as it would be impracticable to apply in every instance to the court for instructions.⁹

What Constitutes Ratification. — Where a receiver executed certain promissory notes without authority, the mere confirmation of the receiver's report showing liabilities against the fund in his hands, but not referring to the execution of the notes, is not a ratification of the receiver's unauthorized act. Peoria Steam Marble Works v. Hickey, 110 Iowa 276.

ners to a settlement between them as partners on the ground that he entered into the partnership without authority. Etowah Min. Co. v. Christopher, 112 Ala. 554.

Extending Time for Payment of Debts. — It has been held that a receiver of a national bank has the power to extend the time of payment of a debt where by so doing he can, in his judgment, strengthen the security for the payment thereof. People's State Bank v. Francis, 8 N. Dak. 369.

Sales of Property. — Where, in making a sale of receivership property, the receiver has in good faith exercised a discretion as to selling in whole or in parcels, it has been held that the sale would not be set aside because the court might differ from the receiver in the opinion as to which was, in the particular case, the best mode of selling. National Bank v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 159.

But the court will set aside the sale where it is clearly of opinion that the mode was not the one calculated to produce the best results. Case v. Fish, 63 Wis. 475.

Application of Funds. — It has been held that a receiver has not, as a rule, any discretion in the application of the funds in his hands, but he must be governed entirely by the orders of court.¹

6. Whom Receiver Represents. — a. IN GENERAL. — The receiver is primarily the representative of the court, whose duty it is to care impartially and without discrimination for the interests of all persons involved in the receivership assets,² though such interests are, at times, various and conflicting, and sometimes involved in doubt.³ But while it is true that a receiver represents equally the interests of all parties, in some cases, in order to determine to what rights the receiver succeeds and what his liabilities are, it is necessary to consider him as the representative of a single party only, and the extent to which he is substituted in the place of such party.⁴

power conferred on the receiver to lease at will, without notice to the mortgagor or holder of the legal title, and without an order of court made upon notice allowing an opportunity to be heard, confers too broad a discretion on the receiver. Gooden v. Vinke, 87 Ill. App. 562.

Receivers of a Corporation represent both the corporation and its creditors, and may, in an action against them, assert any defense to which the creditors, in contradistinction to the corporation, are entitled. Hamor v. Taylor-Rice Engineering Co., 84 Fed. Rep. 392. And see State v. Hemingford Bank, 58 Neb. 818; Atty.-Gen. v. Guardian Mut. L. Ins. Co., 77 N. Y. 272; Gillet v. Moody, 3 N. Y. 479.

And in an action by a receiver of a bank, a defense may be held bad as involving a fraud on the creditors and depositors of the bank, though such defense might have prevailed against the bank. Harrington v. Connor, 51 Neb. 214.

So also as the representative of creditors, the receiver of an insolvent corporation may disaffirm acts of the corporation, and sue to set aside transfers of the corporate property made in fraud of their rights. In re Wilcox, etc., Co., 70 Conn. 220; Washington Mill Co. v. Sprague Lumber Co., 19 Wash. 165.

But a receiver of a corporation is not the representative of creditors in a foreign state. Walter v. F. E. McAlister Co., (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 21 Misc. (N. Y.) 747.

Receiver Not Agent or Servant of Corporation. — Jackson v. McInnis, 33 Oregon 529, 72 Am. St. Rep. 755; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Bledsoe, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 88.

Knowledge of Character of Assets. — But a receiver of a bank is chargeable with knowledge of all facts known to the bank as to the character of its assets. People's State Bank v. Francis, 8 N. Dak. 369.

4. Representative of Corporation. — See Mason v. Henry, 152 N. Y. 529. It has been held that a receiver appointed for the purpose of winding up the affairs of a corporation is, in matters concerning the nature and extent of his title, the representative of the corporate body alone and not of the creditors or stockholders. Young v. Stevenson, 81 Ill. App. 40.

Distinction Between Interests of Creditors and Stockholders and Matters Affecting Corporate Property. — In a case of a corporate receivership decided in the New York Court of Appeals, a distinction was made between the

6. NO ADVANTAGE TO PARTY APPLYING FOR APPOINTMENT. — Where a receiver of the property and effects of a corporation or individual is appointed, he becomes a trustee, not only for the creditor upon whose application he was appointed, but for all the other creditors of the corporation.¹ The appointment of a receiver gives no advantage to the person at whose instance it is made.²

7. Power to Contract — a. GENERAL RULE. — The primary object of a receivership being the preservation of the property pending the litigation, it has been said that the receiver has not the general power, as incident to his office, to make contracts. The court may, however, authorize the receiver to exercise such power, though without the authority of the court contracts made by the receiver are not binding, and the court may ratify or disaffirm them at discretion.³ It has been held, accordingly, that a receiver, in entering into contracts, or appropriating receivership funds to particular purposes of the trust without the express authority of the court, always takes the risk of final approval by the court of his appointment.⁴ It may be stated, therefore, as a general rule, that all contracts made by a receiver are subject to the control of the court, and it may modify or disregard them.⁵ All persons dealing with receivers, it has been declared, do so at their peril, and are bound to take notice of their incapacity to conclude a binding contract without the sanction of the court.⁶

parties in interest as the creditors of the corporation and its shareholders, and matters respecting the corporate property. As to the former the receiver was held to be a trustee for both creditors and stockholders. But as to corporate property it was said that the receiver represented only the corporation and not its creditors or shareholders. Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 44.

Power of Sale in Mortgage. — It has been held that a receiver of a building and loan association cannot foreclose a mortgage to the association under a power of sale contained therein, the association alone being authorized to foreclose by sale. *Strauss v. Municipal Aid. — A receiver has no power, without special authority from the court, to contract for municipal aid to complete a railroad. Smith v. McCullough, 104 U. S. 25.

Delivery to Receiver's Agent — Statute of Frauds. — When contracts for the purchase of materials and supplies have been orally made by a receiver, deliveries to his agents authorized to examine and certify whether such goods should be accepted, and the receipt and acceptance thereof upon such examination and certificate, will satisfy the requirements of section 6 of the New Jersey statute of frauds, and the contract will bind the fund if otherwise enforceable. Vanderbilt v. Central R. Co., 43 N. J. Eq. 669.

Enforcement of Unauthorized Agreement. — Where a receiver of a corporation receives from the sheriff's custodian property which has been levied upon under an execution against the corporation, promising to pay out of it the demand of the judgment creditor, the agreement, although made by the receiver without authority from the court, will be enforced. People v. National Mut. Ins. Co., 19 N. Y. App. Div. 247.

Modification of Lease — Compensation to Lessee. — Where a lease has been executed by the receiver under an ex parte order of the court for a term extending beyond the close of the litigation, the court has power to modify or vacate the order, although the rights of the lessee may be affected thereby. But the lessees, in such case, will be entitled to indemnity if they sustain injury by the modification of such order. Weeks v. Weeks, 106 N. Y. 626.

6. Persons Deal with Receiver at Their Peril. — Lehigh Coal, etc., Co. v. Central R. Co., 35 N.

b. TO CARRY OUT EXISTING CONTRACTS.—A receiver may, when authorized by the court so to do, adopt and ratify and bind himself to carry out and fulfil the existing contracts of the corporation, individual, or firm whose assets have become receivership property.¹

c. TO CONTRACT DEBTS, BORROW MONEY, ETC.—A receiver appointed to conduct a business will, in general, be permitted to buy goods on credit, in furtherance of the objects of his appointment, where this is a usual and proper course in the conduct of such enterprises.² But a receiver authorized to make purchases of material and stock has no implied authority to execute promissory notes therefor.³ A court of equity has power to authorize a receiver to borrow money where it is necessary for the preservation of the estate in his hands, or to the conduct of necessary and proper operations.⁴

8. To Employ Counsel—a. GENERAL RULE.—A receiver may employ an attorney or counsel whenever he requires legal advice as to his duties, or legal services in the prosecution or defense of suits, and it is his duty to do so.⁵ When an attorney has been properly employed, reasonable fees will be allowed to him out of the assets in the hands of the receiver.⁶

But Where a Contract Entered Into by a Receiver Is neither Excessive nor Improvident, and the other contracting party has acted in good faith, a court of equity will not, as a rule, compel the contractor to suffer actual loss in so far as the contract has been performed, although it may refuse to direct its complete performance. *Vanderbilt v. Nor does the fact that the receiver when in funds does not discharge such indebtedness or pay cash for supplies as he should, deprive the parties who sold supplies in good faith of the right to enforce their claims against the receivership assets. Highland Ave., etc., R. Co. v. Thornton, 105 Ala. 225.

b. WHEN EMPLOYMENT PROPER AND WHEN NOT — (1) In General. — It is well settled that counsel fees will not be allowed to a receiver in addition to his regular compensation where the services performed by counsel were only such as the receiver himself should have performed.¹

A Fortiori counsel fees will not be allowed to a receiver for unsuccessfully resisting an application to compel him to account.² A receiver is not required, however, because he happens to be an attorney, to perform legal services in behalf of the estate, but may employ counsel for such purpose, whose fees will be paid out of the receivership assets.³

(2) Litigation Concerning Appointment. — The weight of authority seems to be that the receiver is entitled to an allowance of counsel fees incurred in the successful resistance of an attempt to remove him.⁴ Where, however, the proceedings result in the removal of the receiver, it follows, it has been held, that he was wrong in resisting the application of the party who proceeded against him, and in such a case it would be improper to allow his counsel fees to be cast upon the estate.⁵ Nor will an allowance of counsel fees be made out of the receivership funds for legal services rendered to the parties to the suit, or for which it was the duty of such parties to provide,⁶

South Carolina. — Hubbard v. Camperdown Mills, 25 S. Car. 496; Hand v. Savannah, etc., R. Co., 21 S. Car. 162.

Tennessee. — State v. Edgefield, etc., R. Co., 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 92.

Fees of Attorneys though Receiver's Appointment Invalid. — Receiver's attorneys employed by leave of court are entitled to a reasonable compensation out of the funds in the hands of the receiver of mortgaged property, although it is subsequently determined that such appointment was made in violation of the contract rights of the mortgagee. Brundage v. Home Sav., etc., Assoc., 11 Wash. 288.

Allowance to Receiver Before Payment by Him. — It has been held that an allowance for counsel fees will not be made to a receiver in advance of his actual payment of such fees where the employment of counsel, though proper, was made without express authority of court. Henry v. Henry, 103 Ala. 582.

1. General Rule as to Propriety of Employment of Counsel. — Wilkinson v. Washington Trust Co., (C. C. A.) 102 Fed. Rep. 28; Saulsbury v. Lady Ensley Coal, etc., Co., 110 Ala. 585; Henry v. Henry, 103 Ala. 582; Olson v. State Bank, 72 Minn. 320.

2. Matter of Union Bank, 37 N. J. Eq. 420; Clapp v. Clapp, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 195.

Counsel Fees Will Not Be Allowed to a Receiver for services on a hearing before a master in behalf of a claim which included a charge for fees paid to the same counsel; nor for services before the master on the hearing upon the receiver's account where the principal contest was over the charges of such counsel to the receiver. Sowles v. National Union Bank, 82 Fed. Rep. 139.

Legal Services Due to Receiver's Voluntary Resignation. — It has been held that where the necessity for the application to the court for certain orders to succeeding receivers was due to the voluntary resignation of the prior receiver, such receiver is not entitled to compensation for attorney's fees in making the application and procuring the orders. Saulsbury v. Lady Ensley Coal, etc., Co., 110 Ala. 585.

Appointment Superseded. — Nor will counsel fees be allowed to a receiver for services rendered in obtaining the appointment of a prior receiver whose appointment has been superseded. Sowles v. National Union Bank, 82 Fed. Rep. 139.

3. Olson v. State Bank, 72 Minn. 320.

4. Resisting Attempt to Remove Receiver. — Anderson v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 100 Ga. 739; Kimmerle v. Dowagiac Mfg. Co., 105 Mich. 640.

Apparent Grounds for Attack on Appointment. — The receiver's expenses for counsel's and witnesses' fees incurred in resisting a motion for his removal have been held a proper charge against the fund where it appeared that the receiver acted in good faith and with integrity of purpose, although there may have been apparent grounds for the motion. Cowdrey v. Galveston, etc., R. Co., 1 Woods (U. S.) 334.

5. Matter of Colvin, 4 Md. Ch. 126.

Where Appointment Procured through Fraud. — Expenses in defending his appointment will not be allowed to a receiver when such appointment was procured through fraud, and the order of appointment was reversed on appeal. O'Mahoney v. Belmont, 62 N. Y. 133.

6. Anderson v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 100 Ga. 739. See also Matter of Little, 47 N. Y. App. Div. 22; Ryckman v. Parkins, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 543; State v. Florida Cent. R. Co., 16 Fla. 705.

Subrogation. — But where a receiver has paid the fees of counsel of the parties to the litigation out of the funds in his hands belonging to such parties, he will be subrogated to the liens which such attorneys might have claimed upon their clients' shares. Drake v. Thyng, 37 Ark. 229.

Where Services Not Rendered to Receiver as Such. — An allowance for counsel fees out of receivership funds will not, of course, be made where the services were rendered to the person appointed receiver not as such, but as merely one of the defendants in the suit. Utica Ins. Co. v. Lynch, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 573.

Conducting Appointment Suit. — Counsel fees will not be allowed to a receiver for conducting the suit in which he was appointed. Sowles v. National Union Bank, 82 Fed. Rep. 139.

and under this rule it has been held that the expenses of litigation concerning the receiver's appointment should be borne by the parties interested in the estate, and at their own expense.¹

(3) Criminal Proceedings. — It has been held no part of the duty of a receiver to institute a criminal proceeding, so that no allowance will be made for attorneys' fees incurred therein.²

(4) Who May Be Employed. — A receiver is entitled to counsel of his own. He should not follow the direction of the parties who procured his appointment or of their legal advisers.³ A receiver will not, therefore, be permitted to employ as counsel one whose interests personally or as an attorney for another are hostile to or may conflict with the interests represented by the receiver.⁴ Accordingly the general rule is that the receiver should not employ as his counsel the counsel of the complainant, or the legal adviser of any of the parties to the suit,⁵ or one who is interested in or in the possession of any of the property involved.⁶ But this rule yields to an exception where it is made to appear that there can be no conflict of interest between the party whose counsel is employed and the interests represented by the receiver.⁷

(5) Transactions with Receivership Property. — The attorney of a receiver cannot deal for his own benefit with the trust estate, but may be made to account thereto for profits made in such transactions.⁸

(6) Amount of Allowance for Fees. — The amount which should be allowed as a fee to the attorney or counsel of a receiver is largely within the discretion of the court.⁹ An attorney, in accepting employment by a receiver, it has

1. Rule Stated. — The receiver holds the office at the discretion of the court, and should a dispute arise as to the propriety of continuing him in it or appointing some one in his stead, the controversy should be conducted by the parties interested in the estate and at their own expense. Matter of Colvin, 4 Md. Ch. 126.

Plaintiff's Duty to Sustain Appointment. — As it is the duty of the plaintiff in the suit to sustain the appointment of the receiver, compensation will not be allowed to the receiver for services of an attorney in defending an appeal by the defendant from the appointing order. Saulsbury v. Lady Ensley Coal, etc., Co., 110 Ala. 585.

2. Prosecution of Claimant for Perjury. — Where criminal proceedings were instituted against a party on the ground that he had committed perjury on the trial of certain claims against the receiver, services rendered by an attorney in such proceedings were held not a charge against the receiver. Matter of Little, 47 N. Y. App. Div. 22.

3. Lottimer v. Lord, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 183.

Employment of Receiver's Law Partner. — It has been held no objection to the allowance of attorneys' fees to a receiver that the attorney employed was the law partner of the receiver, where the latter was not to share in the compensation paid. Matter of Simpson, 36 N. Y. App. Div. 562. Compare Matter of Commonwealth F. Ins. Co., 32 Hun (N. Y.) 78.

In a Creditor's Suit to Set Aside Fraudulent Transfers, it has been held appropriate for the receiver to employ the counsel of the creditors. Shainwald v. Lewis, 8 Fed. Rep. 878.

A Receiver in Supplementary Proceedings may employ on his behalf the attorney of the party for whose benefit the proceedings are instituted. Baker v. Van Epps, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 60 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 79, overruling Branch v. Harrington, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 49 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 196; Cumming v. Edgerton, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 685.

But the court cannot be required by the receiver as matter of right, even with the consent of all the parties, to authorize the employment by the receiver of any particular attorney to conduct an action attacking an assignment made by the execution debtor. Rondout First Nat. Bank v. Navarro, 63 Hun (N. Y.) 630, 17 N. Y. Supp. 900.

been declared, must be held to do so with the understanding that his compensation will depend upon the amount that may be allowed to him therefor by the court upon the final accounting of the receiver.¹ In deciding what amount is proper the court will consider the amount of the property involved,² the nature of the services rendered,³ and the extent to which such services were a benefit to the estate.⁴

(7) Liens — Priorities. — It has been held that attorneys' fees do not have priority over fixed liens upon the receivership property.⁵ And where the appointment of a receiver of a corporation by a federal court was imperative because of a prior appointment by a state court, it was held that an attorney rendering services to the receiver appointed by the federal court could not claim priority over the general creditors of the corporation.⁶

9. Employment of Clerks, Assistants, Etc. — A receiver has the power, as a rule, to employ such clerks, assistants, and servants as may be necessary or proper to the custody, control, and administration of the receivership property.⁷ But compensation will not be allowed to a receiver in addition to his own for the employment of an agent or assistant who performs duties which the receiver himself should perform,⁸ nor where he employs a special detective to perform certain functions for which he has a right to call upon the officers of the court,⁹ nor where the business is not of sufficient magnitude to reasonably require the particular kind of expert assistance,¹⁰ nor where, in any case, clerks or assistants have been employed to carry on a business, in the absence of authority from the court for its continuance.¹¹

10. Insurance of Property. — A receiver has power to insure the property intrusted to him whenever such course is a proper precaution for protection against loss,¹² and in such circumstances a credit for reasonable sums paid for Crumlish v. Shenandoah Valley R. Co., 40 W. Va. 627; U. S. v. Church of Jesus Christ, etc., 6 Utah 9.

One-third of Proceeds of Assets. — It has been held that the attorney of a receiver should not be allowed, in addition to expenses and disbursements, a sum exceeding one-third of the proceeds of sale of the assets in the receiver's hands, though the legal services may be intrinsically worth a larger sum. Kernochan v. Ballance, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 435.

Allowance in Excess of Amount Claimed. — Where an attorney employed by a receiver petitions to the court for an allowance for his professional services, and names a certain sum, the court should not grant a larger sum than that named. Richter v. Schroeder, 110 Ill. 112.

Personal Knowledge of Court. — In passing upon the reasonableness of charges made for counsel fees, it has been held that the court may properly consider its personal knowledge as to what has been done by the attorney. Olson v. State Bank, 72 Minn. 320.

insurance premiums will be allowed to him, even though the contract of insurance was not previously sanctioned by the court.¹

11. Expenditures — a. GENERAL RULE. — The expenditures of a receiver must be authorized in advance or be subsequently ratified by the court. Whatever is not so authorized or ratified cannot be allowed to the receiver in settlement.² Where there is no authority in advance for a particular expenditure the court will not ratify it unless it is of a nature essential to the preservation and use of the receivership property as contemplated by the appointment.³ Or, where the receiver has made an outlay honestly, and the court is satisfied that, had application been made, such outlay would have been directed, it will be ratified though no express authority in advance therefor was obtained.⁴ But where such unauthorized expenses have been contracted for by the receiver, they are not allowed to be paid on the theory of the validity of the receiver's contract. The payment of such expenses depends alone upon their subsequent allowance by the court.⁵

b. DISCRETION AS TO EXPENDITURES. — It has been held that the discretion of a receiver in the matter of expenditures is very limited, and that before making any outlay where the receivership fund will be seriously diminished he must obtain the leave of the court which appointed him.⁶ But this general rule will be relaxed to prevent hardship where the receiver has in good faith incurred reasonable liabilities absolutely necessary for the preservation of the trust estate.⁷

Distinction between Several Classes of Receivers. — But in the matter of discretion as to expenditures, a distinction has been taken between the duties and discretion of a receiver appointed to conduct a business or operate a railroad, and a mere passive receiver appointed to hold and preserve property pending the litigation. With reference to receivers of the former nature, it has been said that all expenditures made by the receiver in good faith, in the ordinary course, with a view to advance and promote the interests of the business committed to his charge and to render it profitable and successful, are fairly within the line of discretion which is necessarily allowed to such receiver.¹

c. PAYMENT OF DEBTS—DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS—(1) In General.—After a receiver has collected the assets of the estate it is his duty to pay the debts thereof and distribute the funds to the person or persons entitled.² But where substantial distribution of a fund in a receiver's hand can be made, it has been held that such distribution should not be delayed because of a pending controversy concerning an outstanding claim for a small amount.³

(2) Recovery Back of Disbursements.—A receiver may recover back money paid out by him wrongfully or by mistake, to the prejudice of the fund in his possession as receiver,⁴ or, if the disbursements were made under an order of court improvidently awarded and subsequently revoked, it is proper to require the persons to whom the disbursements were made to return them to the receiver.⁵

d. REPAIRS.—The receiver has the power to make all reasonable and necessary repairs for the preservation of the property committed to his charge,⁶ or, where appointed to operate the property or conduct a business thereon, to make such repairs as are necessary to keep the property in condition for such purpose.⁷ And while, it has been held, receivers have not a general right to expend funds in their hands for repairing the property under their control, and should, as a rule, first apply to the court for an order permitting such expenditure,⁸ if a receiver has made repairs without an order of court, and it appears that such repairs are reasonable, and that the court would have directed them if application had been made, credit may be allowed for them in the receiver's accounts.⁹

e. TAXES—(1) In General.—The property in the hands of a receiver is liable to taxation, and the receiver may, therefore, as a rule, properly pay the taxes thereon.¹⁰

Franchise Tax. — It has been held that where the receiver of an insolvent corporation continues its business and uses his franchise, he must pay the franchise tax assessed while such business is being conducted by him. Matter of George Mather's Sons' Co., 52 N. J. Eq. 607.

But the assets of an insolvent corporation in the hands of receivers are not liable to the payment of a state franchise tax assessed after the adjudication of insolvency against the corporate entity unless the fund arising from the assets is more than sufficient to pay the creditors, or the franchises have been used by the receivers for the benefit of the fund, or in the performance of a duty with reference to the franchise. *Crews v. Rule under Connecticut Statute. — It has been held, however, that receivers of an insolvent insurance company having funds of the insolvent in their hands are not the owners thereof within the meaning of a statute which requires all persons liable to taxation to bring in lists of taxable property belonging to them. Brooks v. Hartford, 61 Conn. 112.

Statute Relating to Taxation of Bank Stock. — A state statute requiring banks to pay the taxes assessed against their stockholders on their shares, and giving to the bank a lien on the stock for the amount of the taxes paid, is based on the theory that the bank holds assets of the stockholder from which it can protect itself. Such payment, therefore, cannot be enforced against the receiver of an insolvent national bank, nor against its assets in his hands, because the receiver in such case has no assets belonging to the shareholders which can be applied to the payment of taxes assessed on the shares. *Stapylton v. But a receiver of a bank appointed without authority cannot maintain a suit to collect claims by the bank,¹ nor does a right of action which belongs to a person only in his official capacity and not as an individual pass to a receiver of his property.²

A Receiver of a Corporation has, as a rule, only the right to bring such suits as the corporation itself had.³ So where a particular right of action is in the stockholders of the corporation and not in the corporate entity, it does not pass to nor is it enforceable by the receiver.⁴

Actions for Wrongs to Receiver's Possession. — Where a receiver has been in possession of personal property, he may maintain in his own name actions for wrongs to his right of possession.⁵

When Right of Action Accrues. — The receiver's right of action relates back to the beginning of the title of the party for whose property he is receiver. He acquires, by subrogation, all the rights of the owner for whom he is substituted.⁶

b. DEFENSES TO RECEIVERS' SUITS. — Where a receiver institutes suit on a claim or demand which has come to him as part of the receivership assets, any defense which might have been set up in an action by the original party may be asserted against the receiver.⁷

c. SUITS AGAINST OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS OF CORPORATIONS. — The receiver of a corporation has a right to maintain an action against the officers and directors of a corporation for losses sustained by the corporation prior to the receivership, by reason of the wrongful, fraudulent, or negligent acts of Accounting — Unlawful Partnership. — A receiver of a corporation which has been dis-

such officers or directors.¹ Thus, an officer of the company who has appropriated its funds to his own use may be compelled, in an action by the receiver, to restore them;² and where the directors of an insolvent corporation have appropriated the funds of the company to the payment of a debt due to one of the directors, without providing for payment of the other creditors, the receiver may recover from the director the amount thus paid to him.³

d. STATUTORY LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS — (1) In General. — Whether a receiver of a corporation may sue to enforce the statutory liability of the stockholders thereof depends, as a rule, upon the language of the statute by which the liability is created. Such actions are not infrequently instituted and maintained by receivers;⁴ and it has been held that the fact that a receiver of a corporation has been appointed by a state court does not preclude a federal court from entertaining an action at law by such receiver against a stockholder, where the amount of the stockholder's liability is fixed and no accounting is necessary.⁵ On the other hand, the statutory liability of stockholders has been regarded as imposed only for the benefit of such individual creditors as might choose to assert it, and as not being, therefore, a right of action which the receiver could enforce.⁶ Under other statutes it solved for entering into an illegal partnership is not entitled to an accounting of the partnership property. Gray v. Oxnard Bros. Co., (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 11 N. Y. Supp. 118.

But a statute merely authorizing a receiver to sue in his own name for the purpose of collecting notes, bills, book accounts, or other evidences of debt, has been held not to authorize the receiver of a corporation to sue its directors on account of losses suffered by the corporation though their misconduct. Thompson v. Greeley, 107 Mo. 577.

2. Hayes v. Kenyon, 7 R. I. 136.

Defenses to Action. — In an action to recover assets converted by corporation officers, they will not be allowed to set up against the receiver the plea that such assets are not needed for the payment of debts of the corporation. McCarty's Appeal, 110 Pa. St. 379.

Right of Corporation. — A receiver appointed to take charge of the property and assets of a corporation cannot maintain an action against the stockholders to enforce an alleged liability which could not have been enforced by the corporation itself. Republic L. Ins. Co. v. Swigert, 135 Ill. 150.

Creditors' Adequate Remedy at Law. — It is no objection to a suit by a receiver of a corporation to recover money paid to stockholders thereof in purchases by the corporation of its own stock, that the creditors of the corporation had an adequate remedy at law. Crandall v. Lincoln, 52 Conn. 73, 52 Am. Rep. 560.

Action in Foreign State. — But it has been held that the receiver of a bank cannot, in a foreign state, maintain an action at law in his own name against stockholders resident therein to enforce a statutory liability according to the laws of the state of his appointment, although he might have maintained such action against stockholders residing in the latter state. *Murtey v. seems that either the receiver or a creditor may sue to recover upon the liability of a stockholder where there is a deficiency of assets.¹

(2) Prerequisite to Suit. — It has been held that before an action can be maintained to enforce the statutory liability of stockholders it must be shown that the corporate funds are exhausted, the liability of the stockholders being collateral only.²

c. UNPAID SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK — (1) General Rule. — The receiver of a corporation may, as a rule, where it is necessary in order to pay the debts of the corporation, enforce payment by the stockholders of their unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock, or of assessments made pursuant to the corporate by-laws;³ nor is the fact that the receiver may represent all the parties to a subscription for a common purpose, including those sued, any objection to his right of action.⁴ It has been held, moreover, that the mere fact that the whole amount of the balance due upon a subscriber's stock may not ultimately be wanted to pay the debts of the corporation, if all the other solvent stockholders should pay their ratable proportions of what still remains due upon their stock, does not necessarily render it inequitable that the receiver should compel the several stockholders to pay the balances due from them respectively in the first instance.⁵ But the receiver has the same power that was possessed by the corporation for the collection of unpaid stock sub-

"It might be great injustice to the creditors of an insolvent corporation," it was said in this case, "to compel them to wait for the whole amount of their respective debts until it could be ascertained by a protracted litigation with all of the stockholders how much each of such stockholders was liable and able to pay."

It Is the Receiver's Duty to Call for the Full Balance Due from the stockholders respectively when he has reason to suppose that the whole scriptions, and no greater.¹ In such an action, therefore, a defendant has the right to avail himself of any defense going to show that he is not liable on his contract of subscription.²

(2) Necessity for Call or Assessment. — It has been held, however, that before the institution of an action by a receiver of a corporation on an unpaid stock subscription, some action equivalent to a call or assessment is essential to fix the liability of the stockholder.³ And it is well settled that the receiver, or the court acting by means of such functionary, has the power to make calls or assessments as an incident of the right of collection.⁴

(3) Suit by Creditors. — After the appointment of a receiver for a corporation, the creditors thereof have not, as a rule, the right to enforce a payment by the stockholders of their unpaid subscriptions.⁵

f. DIVIDENDS ILLEGALLY DECLARED. — A receiver of a corporation may, it has been held, sue to recover dividends illegally declared and paid by a corporation to the stockholders thereof where such course is necessary in order to meet the demands of creditors.⁶

amount due from those who are solvent will be required. Peatz v. Hawley, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 122.

How Necessity for Suit Shown. — It has been held that to show the need of collecting unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock in order to pay the debts of the corporation, the inventory and report of commissioners of the assets are admissible in evidence. Johnston v. Allis, 71 Conn. 207.

The Statute of Limitations does not begin to run against an action by a receiver of a corporation to collect unpaid assessments on corporate stock until the ascertainment of the deficiency, and the necessity, therefore, for suit. Howarth v. Angle, (Supm. Ct. Tr. T.) 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 551.

Demand as Taking Place of Call. — It was held, however, in the case of Johnston v. Allis, 71 Conn. 207, which was an action by the trustee of an insolvent corporation on the unpaid subscription of the only delinquent stockholder, that the demand of the trustee of the payment of the balance due to pay the debts and expenses of the corporation and the administration of its assets fulfilled all the purposes of a technical call, the absence of which could not avail as a defense to the action.

Order Not Constituting a Call. — It has been held that an order appointing a receiver of a corporation, and providing that "if there shall be any sums due upon the shares of the capital stock of said company, the said receiver will proceed to collect and recover the same," does not constitute a call for a balance on the subscription contract due and uncalled for, but merely gives authority to collect sums due on calls already made. *Liggett v. 13. Impeachment of Fraudulent Transactions or Conveyances — a. IN GENERAL. — A receiver may, as a rule, repudiate illegal or voluntary transfers of property, or illegal incumbrances created, or illegal contracts entered into by the individual or corporation for whose estate the receiver has been appointed, and may institute the proper proceedings for setting them aside.¹ And likewise the receiver of a corporation may sustain an action in equity to reach and apply concealed or misappropriated corporate assets.²

poration to recover notes illegally transferred, or their proceeds, a purchaser with knowledge of the illegality is not entitled to recoup or to be allowed the consideration paid by him to the corporation.¹

b. SUMMARY POSSESSION WITHOUT LEGAL PROCEEDINGS. — A receiver has no right to take summary possession of property in the possession of the vendee or grantee on the ground that the transaction was fraudulent, in the absence of any adjudication of the invalidity of the conveyance. The receiver must institute a suit to impeach the transaction². A receiver does not, by virtue of his appointment alone, acquire the legal title to property fraudulently conveyed by the debtor.³

c. DIVERSION OF FUNDS WHILE CORPORATION SOLVENT. — A receiver has no right of action for an improper diversion of corporate funds made by the consent of all the stockholders while the corporation was still a solvent concern.⁴

d. RETURN OF UNSATISFIED EXECUTION. — It has been held that the receiver of a corporation cannot, as representing the creditors thereof, sue to set aside an alleged fraudulent transfer made by the corporation before his appointment, unless there has been a return of an execution unsatisfied against the corporation.⁵ But it has also been held not to be essential to the maintenance of an action to reach assets of an insolvent debtor fraudulently concealed or disposed of that the claims of the creditors represented by the receiver should have been previously reduced to judgment.⁶

e. SUIT BY CREDITOR AFTER APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER. — As a general rule a creditor cannot, after the appointment of a receiver, institute an action for the impeachment of fraudulent transactions or conveyances, such right being vested in the receiver alone by virtue of his appointment. It has been held, however, that a receiver of a judgment debtor cannot sue to set aside a fraudulent transfer of chattels where the transaction was complete before the judgment was entered, because the right of action to impeach such transfer accrues to the judgment creditor, and does not reside in the Judgment Conferred by Firm. — But while, it has been held, a receiver appointed at the instance of a judgment creditor might successfully invoke the aid of a court of equity in setting aside fraudulent transfers previously made by the judgment debtor, yet a receiver appointed in a suit by two of the partners of an insolvent firm against the other, for the purpose of winding up the business of the firm, succeeds only to the rights of action belonging to the firm. A receiver so appointed, therefore, could not question judgments confessed by the firm for the purpose of giving a fraudulent preference. Weber v. Weber, 90 Wis. 467.

When Receiver Estopped to Assert Fraud. — A receiver of an insolvent firm is estopped to assert, as against the creditors of an insolvent corporation, that property levied upon by the latter's creditors was transferred to it by such firm for the purpose of hindering and delaying creditors of the firm. *Gottlieb v. Where Rights of Creditors Protected in Distribution of Assets. — It has been held that though a judgment valid as to some of the creditors of a corporation is invalid as to others, it will not be set aside by the court in which it was entered at the instance of the receiver of the corporation, since the rights of those creditors as against whom the judgment is invalid can be protected in the distribution of the company's assets. *Beebe v. judgment debtor.¹ So it has also been held that a receiver appointed under a particular act to prevent fraudulent trusts and assignments has no power to impeach a conveyance of land made by the debtor in fraud of creditors, such right being personal and peculiar to creditors, and not being expressly vested in the receiver by the statute.²

14. Power to Compromise Claims or Suits. — The court appointing a receiver may authorize him to compromise claims and suits by or against the estate if best for the interest of all parties concerned.³ A receiver may, of course, receive money payable under a contract before it becomes due,⁴ and may satisfy a mortgage on payment of the debt secured thereby before maturity.⁵ So, it has been held, a receiver may exercise an option of having securities deposited as collateral considered as an absolute payment.⁶

15. Receivers' Sales — a. GENERAL RULE. — It is well settled that the court may, pendente lite, order or authorize a sale of property in the hands of its receiver whenever the interests of the parties concerned will be promoted thereby.⁷ In some instances, indeed, a receiver is appointed for the very purpose of an immediate sale of property, as where it is shown that property attached is of such a character that its value would be much diminished and impaired by lapse of time.⁸ But a sale of property the title to which is in dispute will not be ordered in advance of the trial and ultimate determination of the rights of the respective parties, unless some necessity therefor is made to appear.⁹

The Mere Fact that the Court Has Possession by Its Receiver is not sufficient to authorize an order of sale. Brush v. Jay, 113 N. Y. 482.

Collection in Preference to Sale of Debts. — It has been held that a receiver of a corporation to which a large number of persons are indebted should be directed to collect rather than to sell the debts. Deford v. Macwatty, 82 Md. 168.

Sale of Mortgaged Property Before Default. — A court may, it has been held, order a sale of mortgaged property in the hands of its receiver before the maturity of the mortgage debt or default in the payment of interest.¹

b. DISCRETION OF COURT. — Whether or not the court will order its receiver to sell property in his hands is, as a rule, a matter of judicial discretion which will not be disturbed by an appellate tribunal in the absence of a clear showing of abuse.²

c. CONFORMITY OF SALE TO TERMS OF ORDER. — A sale of receivership property must, as to manner and terms of sale, conform to the order of court authorizing or directing such sale.³

d. PURCHASERS — (1) In General. — One bidding at a receiver's sale makes himself a party to the proceedings and subject to the jurisdiction of the court for all orders necessary to compel the perfecting of the purchase, and with a right to be heard on all questions arising affecting his bid.⁴

(2) Who May Buy. — A sale of corporate assets may be made to the directors of the corporation, if made in good faith and for an adequate price.⁵ So judgment creditors of a corporation are at liberty to bid upon and buy in the corporate property at a receiver's sale thereof, and this can be done by all together, or by one for the benefit of all.⁶ At a sale of partnership property including the good will of the business, either of the partners may become the purchaser in order that the best price may be obtained for the good will.⁷

(3) Rights of Purchaser Where Sale Invalid. — Where a receiver's sale is set aside for material error on the part of the receiver as to the quantity and value of the property sold,⁸ or because he had no power to sell,⁹ or where the purchaser rightfully refuses to complete the purchase because of defects in the title,¹⁰ the purchaser is entitled to reimbursement of any money paid

1. Metropolitan Bank v. New Orleans Brewing Assoc., 51 La. Ann. 1525.

Sale for Less than Mortgage Debt. — The court may, it has been held, order a sale of mortgaged property in the hands of its receiver for less than the mortgage debt, subject to the laws regarding the appraisal of property disposed of at judicial sale. Metropolitan Bank v. New Orleans Brewing Assoc., 51 La. Ann. 1525.

Redemption of Property Sold by Receiver. — A creditor of a corporation who recovers judgment against it after the appointment of a receiver has no right to redeem real estate of the corporation sold by the receiver under order of court. Watkins v. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co., 41 Minn. 150.

3. South Baltimore Brick, etc., Co. v. Kirby, 89 Md. 52; Ackerman v. Ackerman, 50 Neb. 54.

Effect of Confirmances by Court. — Where the receiver advertised and sold after the date fixed by the decree for the sale, it was held that such sale was void, and was not validated by a confirmation by the court over objections. Ackerman v. Ackerman, 50 Neb. 54.

Private Instead of Public Sale — Not Binding on Court. — South Baltimore Brick, etc., Co. v. Kirby, 89 Md. 52.

Provision Requiring Public Sale. — Where an order of court in receivership proceedings directs that notice of a sale of property shall be given by advertisement, a public sale is required. South Baltimore Brick, etc., Co. v. Kirby, 89 Md. 52.

Where a Bond Was Delivered, conditioned to pay to the receiver the price of certain property sold if after confirmation of the sale he would deliver the property to the vendee without requiring immediate payment of the purchase price, it was held that the receiver might enforce the bond, although delivery of the property before payment of the price was in violation of the order of court under which the sale was made. O'Gorman v. Sabin, 62 Minn. 46.

by him with interest, together with all costs and expenses properly and reasonably incurred in the premises.

(4) Notice to Purchasers of Terms of Order.—Purchasers at receivers' sales are, in general, chargeable with notice of the terms of the decree of sale, so that a sale by the receiver made in violation thereof is not binding on the court or enforceable by the vendee.¹

(5) Rule of Caveat Emptor.—Only such title and interest passes on a sale by the receiver as was possessed by the party whose interest is being sold. The rule caveat emptor applies, and it is for the purchaser to ascertain what that interest is.² This rule applies, it has been held, to the condition of the property as well as to its title, and in an action for the purchase money it is no defense, in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation, that the property was in defective condition.³ But as a purchaser at a receiver's sale takes only the title which the receiver was authorized to convey, so also a purchaser of a note or other evidence of indebtedness from a receiver succeeds to any immunity against a defense which could not be set up against the receiver.⁴

(6) Compelling Purchaser to Complete Contract.—Where a sale has been made by a receiver pursuant to an order of court, the court has jurisdiction to compel the proposed purchaser to perform his part of the contract;⁵ or the receiver may, it has been held, immediately sue the purchaser for the amount of his bid.⁶

ε. RECEIVER'S DEED.—The authority to sell conferred by the court upon a receiver carries with it authority to give to the purchaser evidence of a transfer of title, and to execute a proper deed or assignment of the property sold.⁷ It is not a question, in this connection, whether the receiver is himself

Notice of Provisions of Lease.—Where a leasehold estate, the lease of which is recorded, is disposed of at a receiver's sale, the vendee will be deemed to have purchased with full knowledge of the provisions of the lease. Brookfield v. Sharp, 88 Md. 713.

3. Newberry v. Trowbridge, 13 Mich. 263; Barron v. Mullin, 21 Minn. 374.

Acquiescence in Ratification.—Where the purchaser acquiesced in and consented to the ratification of the sale, the fact that another piece of real estate was included in the sale, but was omitted in the deed, is not a defense to an action for the purchase money. Barron v. Mullin, 21 Minn. 374.

4. A Purchaser of the Assets of a Bank in succeeding to the title of the receiver thereto succeeds also to the benefit of exemption from a defense which would involve the enforcement of an agreement with the bank fraudulent as to its creditors and depositors, where such defense could not be set up in an action by the receiver on an evidence of indebtedness constituting a part of such assets. Harrington v. Connor, 51 Neb. 214.

6. Hanke v. Blattner, 34 Ill. App. 394.

Suit to Set Aside Fraudulent Conveyance.—But under an order of court directing a receiver to sue a purchaser for nonpayment of the purchase price agreed on, the receiver is not authorized to bring an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of other land made by the purchase-money debtors in order to subject it to the payment of the purchase-money debt. McAllister v. Harman, 97 Va. 543.

Defenses to Action Against Purchaser.—In an action by a receiver to enforce the terms of a sale made by him, the purchaser cannot object that the sale has not been reported to the court. Hanke v. Blattner, 34 Ill. App. 394.

Misdescription—After Confirmation of Sale.—It has been held that after confirmation of sale and acquiescence therein by the purchaser, such person will not be heard to object that there was a misdescription in the property sold and that he therefore refuses to perform his bid, though such fact might have been a valid objection to a confirmation of the sale. Barron v. Mullin, 21 Minn. 374.

7. Execution of Deed.—Koontz v. Northern Bank, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 196; Watkins v. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co., 41 Minn. 150; Russell v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 68 Tex. 646; Atchison v. Davidson, 2 Pin. (Wis.) 48.

Formalities of Execution.—Assignments and vested with title, but merely whether the court, through its receiver, has power to pass the title of the person or corporation to the property in question;¹ but the receiver should not execute the deed until after confirmation of the sale by the court, because if confirmation were refused, the deed would be inoperative.² Where, however, the receiver executes a deed before confirmation of the sale by the court, the instrument is voidable only and not void, and a subsequent confirmation of the sale removes all objection to the regularity of the deed.³

f. CONFIRMATION OF SALE BY COURT. — Where a sale is made by a receiver it should be reported to the court for confirmation,⁴ the court having entire control and supervision over sales by its receivers, which may be confirmed or rejected at its discretion. And, furthermore, purchasers will be presumed to know that they purchase subject to the court's disapproval of the sale.⁵ A sale of property by a receiver will, in general, be confirmed where it is made on good faith and for the best interests of all concerned;⁶ nor will a resale be ordered for the mere purpose of experimenting to see whether an advance in price cannot be obtained.⁷ But a receiver's sale will be set aside where it is based on material errors as to the amount and value of the property;⁸ and where an advertisement is at variance with the terms of the order of sale in any material respect, a sale made thereunder will not, in general, be confirmed.⁹ So if there has been a fraudulent or collusive sale, the court may, even after confirmation, set it aside if the rights of innocent third parties have not intervened.¹⁰ transfers by receivers of corporations are properly executed by them in their own names without the use of the name of the corporation, or the corporate seal. Hoyt v. Thompson, 5 N. Y. 320, reversing 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 416.

Effect of Recitals in Deed. — It has been held that recitals in a receiver's deed of his appointment and the order of sale are not, as against a third person, prima facie evidence of his authority to make the conveyance, nor does the court's approval of the deed dispense with proof of the facts recited where their existence is properly in issue. Lawless v. Stamp, 108 Iowa 601.

Deed or Assignment by Owner of Property. — Where it is necessary in order to vest title in the purchaser of receivership property, the owner thereof may be required to execute an assignment or any other instrument requisite for the purpose. Habenicht v. Lissak, 78 Cal. 351, 12 Am. St. Rep. 63.

When Confirmation Not Necessary. — Where a sale by a receiver has been specially authorized, and the terms and manner thereof expressed in the order, the sale pursuant thereto and in conformity therewith does not require ratification by the court for its validity. Matter of Denison, 114 N. Y. 621, 22 N. Y. St. Rep. 964.

Inadequacy of Price Held Not Valid Objection to Confirmation. — Parker v. Bluffton Car Wheel Co., 108 Ala. 140.

But a Private Sale by a Receiver may be set aside where a material advance over the price received has been offered, and there is reasonable ground for anticipating competition among bidders at a resale. See South Baltimore Brick, etc., Co. v. Kirby, 89 Md. 52.

Depreciation of Property Since Sale. — The court will not, at the instance of the purchaser, refuse to confirm a sale of property by a receiver on the ground of delay in the confirmation and depreciation of the property in value since the sale, where the delay in having the report of sale ratified has been due to the acts of the purchaser himself. Brookfield v. Sharp, 88 Md. 713.

8. Material Errors. — Horse Springs Cattle Co. v. Schofield, 9 N. Mex. 136.

Where a receiver sold stock of the par value of twenty-seven thousand dollars for a mere nominal consideration, under the mistaken belief that the stock was practically worthless, whereas by reason of the directors' liability it was probably worth par, it was held that the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, might properly refuse to confirm the sale. Atty.-Gen. v. Continental L. Ins. Co., 94 N. Y. 199.

9. Slaughter v. Strother, 99 Ga. 633.

10. Koontz v. Northern Bank, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 196.

g. EFFECT OF SALE UPON EXISTING LIENS. — A sale by a receiver does not affect prior existing liens.¹ The property passes to the purchaser subject to all legal incumbrances, and he may, therefore, contest the validity of all such liens and the amount thereof.² But a purchaser of corporate property at a sale under a decree of foreclosure which recites that the sale shall be made subject to liens established on references before had or then pending cannot dispute the validity of liens thus established.³ Receivers are, however, not infrequently directed to sell receivership property free of all liens and clear of all incumbrances thereon, bringing the proceeds into court, there to remain, subject to the same liens and equities in interest as was the property before it was sold.⁴

h. CLAIMS ARISING OUT OF RECEIVERSHIP. — The court may order that the property shall be subject to debts and liabilities incurred by the receiver in its management. The sale in such case is conditional in its nature, and the purchaser takes it cum onere.⁵ And notwithstanding a sale of the property under final decree, the court has power to retain jurisdiction of the cause so as to enforce such claims against the property.⁶ In the absence of such provision, however, the purchaser takes free from claims and debts arising out of the receivership.⁷

Failure to Give Proper Information to Purchasers, Etc. — Deford v. Macwatty, 82 Md. 168.

1. Liens Not Affected. — Richards v. Haliday, 92 Fed. Rep. 798; Fitch v. Wetherbee, 110 Ill. 475; Cooper v. Corbin, 105 Ill. 224; Lorch v. Aultman, 75 Ind. 162; *Snow v. 2. Hackensack Water Co. v. De Kay, 36 N. J. Eq. 548.

Sale Subject to Trust Deed. — The fact that a sale of receivership property was made expressly subject to a trust deed thereon does not preclude a purchaser from questioning the validity of the deed where its validity had not been put in issue and determined. Rogers v. Southern Pine Lumber Co., 21 Tex. Civ. App. 48.

Objections for Champerty or Maintenance. — A sale by receivers is in the nature of a judicial sale, and is not open to objection on the ground of champerty or maintenance. The statute against buying and selling pretended titles cannot apply. Hoyt v. Thompson, 5 N. Y. 320.

Collateral Securities. — Where a corporation, before going into the hands of receivers, assigned certain leases to a bank as security, and afterwards the receivers, under order of court, sold all the property of the corporation free and clear of incumbrances, it was held that the assignment of the leases was a mere authority to collect and appropriate the rents due thereon, and that the rents which accrued after the sale belonged to the purchaser. Corrigan v. Trenton Delaware Falls Co., 7 N. J. Eq. 489.

Statutory Authority Requisite. — It has been held, however, that in the absence of a statute giving such power a court has no authority to direct a receiver to sell real estate free from judgment liens thereon. Lebanon Brewing Co., 3 Pa. Dist. 260.

Purchaser's Right to Removal of Liens. — A purchaser of property at a receiver's sale has been held entitled to the removal of liens of attachments levied before the property passed into the hands of the receiver, before he will be compelled to comply with the terms of sale. Brookfield v. Sharp, 88 Md. 713.

Taxes. — A purchaser of property at a receiver's sale on which a special tax assessment has become a lien prior to the sale is entitled to have such assessment paid by the receiver from the proceeds of the sale. Sandheger v. Banner Brewing Co., 8 Ohio Dec. 592, 6 Ohio N. P. 410.

16. Profits in Transactions with Receivership Property. — A receiver will not be permitted to deal with the trust estate for his own benefit and advantage,¹ but will be required to account to the receivership fund for all profits made in such transactions.² And the rule, it has been held, prohibiting a receiver from dealing with the trust estate is wholly independent of the question of actual fraud in the transaction.³ A receiver may not, therefore, purchase the receivership property, either at his own sale⁴ or even at a judicial sale under a decree against the receiver and paramount to his title.⁵ At all events, such transaction will be voidable at the election of the beneficiaries of the receivership.⁶

In Some Exceptional Cases, However, where all the parties in interest consent, or the transaction is manifestly fair and for the benefit of the trust estate, the receiver has been permitted to deal with the receivership property as though a stranger to the proceedings.⁷

17. Inventories and Accounts. — One of the first duties of a receiver after his appointment is to make a complete inventory of the property and effects coming into his hands.⁸ He should also keep a fair and accurate account thereof, as well as of all moneys received and expended, so that the court of the receivership have been diverted to the enhancement of the property, to the extent of such diversion, Burnham v. Bowen, 111 U. S. 782; Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 62 Miss. 271.

A Person Who, at an Unconditional Public Sale made by a receiver, under order of court, purchases a land contract and notes for the purchase price, executed to the receiver, is entitled to the contract and notes free from any claims or debts arising out of the receivership. *Emerson v. Appraised Value. — It has been held that a receiver who buys the receivership property at a sale under order of court should be held liable for the appraised value of the property, at least, though the sale is not impeached. Receivership Sheets Lumber Co., 52 La. Ann. 1337.

8. Inventory. — Hooper v. Winston, 24 Ill. 365; Matter of Seaman, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 409.

Jurisdiction to Order Sale. — It is not, however, necessary that receivership property shall be inventoried in order to give to the court jurisdiction to order a sale thereof. French v. McCready, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 57 S. W. Rep. 896.

Neglect to Make Inventory — Allowance of Accounts. — The fact that the receiver has neglected his duty to make an inventory of the property which has come into his possession is not ground for refusing to allow his account where no injury has ensued from such neglect. Heffron v. Rice, 149 Ill. 216, 41 Am. St. Rep. 271.

XII. JURISDICTION AND CONTROL OVER PROPERTY AND FUNDS — 1. In General. — When a receiver is appointed he is entitled to take possession and control of the property or funds involved, and to manage and dispose of the same under the direction of the appointing court.² Nor may a person duly appointed receiver turn over to another the control and management of the property and business intrusted to his charge, and any contract or agreement looking to such arrangement is void.³ But the mere order of appointment of a receiver does not, it has been held, in contemplation of law, constitute actual possession of the property.⁴

2. Aid of Court in Obtaining Possession. — In order to obtain possession of property or funds, it is not necessary in any case for the receiver to put himself in a situation where he is not entitled to the full protection of the court. He is under no obligation to attempt to take property out of the possession of a third person, or even out of the possession of the defendant himself by force, and without an express order of the court directing him to do so.⁵ Where property or funds to which the receiver is entitled are withheld from his possession the court will make an order requiring delivery to the receiver.⁶

Character of Receiver's Possession. — Receivers are not assignees, and the principles of the common law applicable to assignees do not define or determine the character of a receiver's possession or its effect upon the rights of those interested in the property in their possession. New York, etc., R. Co. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 58 Fed. Rep. 268.

Constructive Trust for Benefit of Receiver. — It has been held that where a party conceals property to which a receiver is entitled, he will be deemed to hold it under a constructive trust for the benefit of the receiver. *Reynolds v. Assets in Hands of Partner. — Where a partner makes application for a receiver of the copartnership effects for the purpose of liquidating debts, the court will compel him to pay over to the receiver assets collected by him shortly prior to his application. Murphy v. Du Berg, (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 11 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 112.

Action for Conversion. — A receiver may maintain an action against the judgment debtor, of whose property he is appointed receiver, for a conversion thereof, where the debtor has converted the property since it became vested in the receiver. But for a refusal to surrender a mere possession to which neither the debtor nor the receiver has any legal right, and which the debtor holds only by sufferance, no action will lie by the receiver. Gardner v. Smith, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 68.

But as in any particular action the court has jurisdiction over only the property which is the subject of that litigation, that is the only property which it can authorize its receiver to interfere with or to take into his possession.¹

3. Writ of Assistance. — Where necessary to the proper performance of his functions, or to the securing possession of property, the receiver may obtain a writ of assistance from the court.²

4. Order of Sequestration. — Where a party refuses to deliver over property to a receiver, who is entitled to its custody, the receiver may have an order to sequester property.³

5. Question of Privilege. — There is no privilege exempting a person from surrendering property in his possession to a receiver in obedience to order of court, though such person may be under indictment for stealing or embezzling the same. But such person could not be compelled to make any discovery or disclosure with respect to the fact of his possession of such property which would tend to incriminate.⁴

6. Where Third Person in Possession under Claim of Title. — Where property is in the hands of third persons claiming title, the court will not, in general, order its surrender to the receiver, but will refrain from interference until the question of title has been settled.⁵ And where the defendant is in possession of property, avowedly as the agent of a third person not connected with the litigation, who has prima facie title thereto, it has been held improper to order the delivery of such property to the receiver, in advance of a judicial determination of the question of ownership.⁶

7. Receiver's Title — a. AT COMMON LAW. — At common law the mere appointment of a receiver did not vest him with the legal title of the property coming into his possession or control,⁷ though it has been held that in the view of a court of equity the receiver possessed title by virtue of his appointment to both the real and personal estate of the debtor.⁸ With reference to the title of a receiver, however, the courts of some of the states have distinguished between real and personal estate, holding as to the latter that the mere appointment of the receiver and the taking possession thereof vested him with the legal title thereto,⁹ while a different rule prevailed as to the real estate, a conveyance to the receiver being necessary to vest in him the legal title.¹

Where the Appointment of a Receiver Is Void for want of jurisdiction, the court has no power to make an order requiring a person, not a party to the proceedings, to pay over to the receiver a deposit made by the receiver with such person. State v. District Ct., 21 Mont. 155, 69 Am. St. Rep. 645.

b. RULE BY STATUTE — (1) In General. — Under various state statutes relating to the appointment of receivers for corporations, or the appointment of receivers in proceedings supplementary to execution, it has been held that the receiver takes title to both the real and personal property merely by virtue of the order of his appointment.²

(2) Receivers Pendente Lite. — But receivers pendente lite, appointed merely as custodians to hold the property until the determination of the suit, do not, it has been held, acquire title thereto.³

c. CONVEYANCE OR ASSIGNMENT TO RECEIVER. — It is well settled that wherever necessary or desirable the court may compel the owner of property for which a receiver has been appointed to execute a conveyance or assignment thereof to the receiver.⁴

d. PATENTS. — The legal title to a patent does not pass to the receiver of an insolvent debtor.⁵ The general rule is, therefore, that a receiver cannot convey the legal title to a patent, unless the owner of the legal title joins in the conveyance.⁶ But this rule does not apply to the transfer of a mere equitable title to a patent.⁷

A Mere License to Manufacture or Use a patented invention is personal to the licensee,¹ and the receiver of a firm to which such a license has been granted will not succeed to the firm's right.²

e. AFTER-ACQUIRED PROPERTY — INCHOATE RIGHTS, ETC. — The general rule is that a receiver takes no title to property acquired by the debtor or person formerly in possession, subsequent to the appointment.³ And even where a statute provided that on the appointment of a receiver in supplementary proceedings he became entitled to the property and things in action of the judgment debtor, "at the time of issuing said execution or at any time afterwards," it was held that a receiver was not entitled to recover a debt not in existence at the time of his appointment.⁴ But property due a judgment debtor by the terms of a will probated prior to the receiver's appointment is not property "subsequently acquired" under a statute providing that a receiver shall take no title to after-acquired property.⁵ Mere contingent or inchoate rights do not pass to a receiver.⁶

f. PROPERTY IN CUSTODIA LEGIS. — It has been held that where property is already in the custody of the law a receiver will, in general, take no title thereto.⁷ But by statute in some jurisdictions a receiver may be appointed to preserve and sell attached property.⁸ And where the property of a corporation was in danger of being greatly impaired in value by reason of the expiration of its franchise within a short time unless certain operations were completed, it was held that the fact that the property of the corporation was in the possession of the sheriff under execution would not prevent the appointment of a receiver therefor.⁹

g. PROPERTY EXEMPT FROM EXECUTION. — The receiver has no title to property which is by law exempt from levy and sale under execution,¹⁰ nor to the proceeds of insurance policies upon, nor to rights of action for injury to, such exempt property.¹ So it has been held that the remedy of appointment of a receiver in foreclosure is not, in general, applicable where the mortgaged property is the debtor's homestead.² But where a judgment debtor is only entitled to an exemption to the extent of a portion of a debt due him, the appointment of a receiver of the entire debt, directing that the proceeds thereof be held subject to the order of the court, is not erroneous.³

h. BOOKS AND PAPERS. — A receiver should take into his possession and control all books of account and papers and documents relating to the property or business necessary for the proper and intelligent discharge of his duties.⁴ The receiver of a corporation may be compelled to allow stockholders to examine the corporate books.⁵ But where the books in possession of a receiver contain matters not relevant to the issues in the case, a disclosure of which might be injurious to interests not involved in the suit, they should be protected by the court.⁶

8. Liability of Receivership Property to Judicial Process — a. IN GENERAL. — The general rule is that property in the hands of a receiver is exempt from judicial process, except, of course, so far as permitted by the appointing court.⁷ And even though an attachment was levied on property before the appointment of the receiver, it is within the sound discretion of the appointing court to refuse to permit a sale of the property thereunder.⁸ So, also, a judgment decreeing the foreclosure of a mortgage in certain property and ordering that the bill of sale of the property given at the time of the mortgage be canceled, is void when rendered after the appointment of a receiver for all of the property of the vendee in the bill of sale.¹

b. SALE UNDER EXECUTION. — Property in the hands of a receiver, though subject to a paramount judgment, cannot be sold under execution without leave of court,² and a purchaser of such property at an execution sale acquires no title.³ Nor does it make any difference that the particular person appointed receiver declines to act, as the property is nevertheless in the custody of the law.⁴

Levy Prior to Receivership. — Courts will not ordinarily permit property in the hands of a receiver, even where there has been a valid levy prior to the appointment, to be sold under execution, for the reason that by such means the property in the possession of the court will be dissipated, and the court deprived of jurisdiction to administer it.⁵ The usual course is, after adjudging the lien, to leave the property in the hands of the receiver, directing him to sell it in the usual course of the receivership.⁶ But the court appointing the receiver may, if it sees fit, grant leave to the creditor to proceed and sell upon execution. It is a mere matter of the most advantageous administration of the assets.⁷

Where Possession Not Disturbed. — According to the doctrine of some cases, property in the hands of a receiver may be levied upon and sold, so long as the actual possession of the receiver is not interfered with.⁸ But the soundness of this view has been denied.⁹

Levy on Judgment. — Of course, however, the appointment of a receiver for the property of a judgment debtor does not prevent a levy upon and sale under execution of judgments against such debtor as the property of the judgment creditor, such levies and sales in no way interfering with the performance of his official duties by the receiver of the property of the judgment debtor.¹⁰

9. Receiver's Rights Subject to Existing Liens — a. GENERAL RULE. — The appointment of a receiver for property does not affect pre-existing liens upon the property, or vested rights or interests of third persons therein.¹¹ And the only such right, title, and interest in the property as the individual or corporation for which he is appointed receiver had at the time the appointment was made. The receiver takes his title to the property subject to all the equities to which it was subject in the hands of the debtor.¹

Contribution to Expenses for Preservation of Property. — Property on which there are liens is, nevertheless, while in the hands of a receiver, liable for its proper proportion of the expenses necessary to protect the property or to change it into money for the lienor's benefit.² But it has been held that a lien on receivership property, continued upon the proceeds when sold, cannot be subordinated, against the consent of the lienor, to the fees and expenses of the receiver incurred in continuing the business by authority of court, where such expenses will exhaust the fund.³

Appointment Conditional upon Payment of Unsecured Debts. — It is not, as a rule, proper for a court to make a receivership for the purpose of enforcing mortgage liens conditional on the payment of unsecured claims which have no equitable priority over the mortgage debt.⁴

b. PROPERTY HELD SUBJECT TO LIENS. — Where property on which there are prior liens has come into the possession of a receiver, the receiver must hold and dispose of the same subject to such liens.⁵ So money coming into the receiver's hands from the sale of property upon which liens have attached will, for the purpose of determining the priority of liens thereon, be treated as the property itself.⁶

c. DISTURBANCE OF RECEIVER'S POSSESSION. — But persons having liens on the property for which a receiver is appointed have no right to interfere with the receiver's possession thereof.⁷

d. SALES UNDER EXECUTION — FORECLOSURE, ETC. — Although, it has been held, receivers take property subject to judgment liens thereon, permission will not be given to levy execution on the property in the absence of some urgent necessity for such a course. Instead the receiver will be instructed to administer the estate and distribute the proceeds with due regard to the priority of claims.⁸ But a party who has obtained a judgment

Sale under Prior Execution. — Where a sale under execution was made of property for which a receiver had subsequently been appointed the New York Court of Appeals said: "Persons having liens upon the property had no right to interfere with its possession by the receiver, and, without any application or adjudication of the court, sell and dispose of it,

e. WHERE PROPERTY IN POSSESSION OF LIENOR. — Where the property of the defendant is in the possession of a third party under claim of lien thereon approximating the full value of the property, the court will not, as a rule, order the receiver to disturb such possession.² But the fact, it has been held, that a lien had attached to a part only of the debtor's property would not necessarily render it improper for a receiver to take possession.³

f. PROPERTY HELD AS COLLATERAL. — The holder of collateral security for a debt of the individual or corporation for whose property a receiver is appointed has a right to sell and apply the same, notwithstanding the appointment of a receiver.⁴

g. SET-OFF AGAINST RECEIVER. — In an action by a receiver the defendant is entitled to set up any equity, set-off, or counterclaim which would have been available as against the original owner of the claim or demand.⁵ But a set-off will not be allowed where the claim or demand sought to be set off was acquired subsequent to the receivership,⁶ nor where the liability is to the receiver as such, and the claim sought to be set off antedates the appointment of the receiver;⁷ nor where the effect would be practically to give a preference to the one creditor over others.⁸ Nor will a receiver of a corporation be

Action Against Stockholder for Unpaid Subscription. — In a suit by a receiver of an insolvent bank against a stockholder for an unpaid subscription to the capital stock, the defendant stockholder cannot set off a deposit due him from the bank. Williams v. Traphagen, 38 N. J. Eq. 57.

10. When Receiver's Title Vests — a. IN GENERAL. — When a receiver is appointed, the right to the custody of the property in controversy vests in him immediately upon the filing of his bond.² But the receiver's title to the property vests, upon his qualification, by relation back to the date of his appointment,³ so as to exclude the acquisition of liens upon the property by creditors or third persons between the time of his appointment and his qualification by the making of a bond.⁴ And it is well settled, of course, that after the appointment and qualification of a receiver, no lien can be acquired on the receivership property by judgment, levy of execution, garnishment, etc.⁵ The title of the receiver when appointed, it has been held, vests by relation at the time of granting the order, even though he remains out of possession pending the performance of preliminary conditions necessary to qualify him to act.⁶ But the order appointing a receiver cannot, it has been held, as against third persons, so operate as to relate back of the date upon which it was granted.⁷

Surrender of Property to Receiver. — In such case a sheriff who levies upon the property between the time of appointment and the qualification of the receiver by the perfecting of the bond will be required to surrender the property to the receiver. Maynard v. Bond, 67 Mo. 315; Steele v. Sturges, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 5 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 442. And see Defries v. Creed, 11 Jur. N. S. 360, 34 L. J. Ch. 607; Edwards v. Edwards, 2 Ch. D. 291; *Ex p. Exception to Rule. — It has been held, however, that the rule above stated does not apply so as to defeat the lien of an execution issued on a judgment recovered after the appointment of the receiver, and levied before he qualified, where the debtor had no defense to the creditor's claim, but had prevented the obtaining of the judgment before the appointment of the receiver by interposing a frivolous demurrer. Matter of Lewis, etc., Mfg. Title by Subrogation. — Where the order appointing a receiver authorized him to collect rents of certain property and sue for them, he was subrogated to the defendant's title, and his right of action related back to the commencement of such title. Hardwick v. Hook, 8 Ga. 354.

b. AS OF DATE OF INSTITUTION OF PROCEEDINGS. — In some cases it seems to have been held that the receiver's title to the property involved vests as of the date of the institution of the proceedings or the filing of the bill in the course of which, or upon which, he was appointed.¹

c. SUBSEQUENT ASSIGNMENT OF PROPERTY. — Where a court has taken possession of property by its receiver, or has appointed a receiver therefor, a subsequent assignment by the owner is inoperative as against the receiver.² But a receiver subsequently appointed cannot compel an assignee for the benefit of creditors to turn over the assets.³

d. SUBSEQUENT PURCHASERS. — A purchaser with notice of creditor's proceedings for the appointment of a receiver takes subject to the receiver's title,⁴ but the rule does not extend to bona fide purchasers without notice.⁵

e. RULE IN SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS. — The title of a receiver in supplementary proceedings relates back to the service of the order for the examination of the judgment debtor, except as to bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration.⁶

XIII. LIABILITIES OF RECEIVER — 1. General Rule. — It may be stated as a general rule that the sole liability of a receiver, except in cases where he is personally at fault, is official.⁷ So, in an action against a receiver in his official capacity, judgment cannot be rendered against him personally. It must be entered against him as receiver, and so as to be payable out of funds held by him in that capacity, and enforceable only against property in his custody.⁸

2. Negligence or Misconduct — a. GENERAL RULE. — A receiver is liable to any person who sustains loss by reason of the receiver's negligence or misconduct with reference to the receivership property.⁹ Where, however, a

Effect of Death of Debtor. — It has been held that the authority of a receiver appointed in proceedings supplementary to execution relates back from the time of filing the bond to the time of the order of appointment, although the bond was not filed until after the death of the debtor and the appointment of an administrator. Peters v. Carr, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 22.

Where Redress Sought. — It has been held that where an injury results from the default or misconduct of a receiver appointed by a court of equity while acting under color of judicial authority, there being no dispute as to the power of the court to make the order under which the receiver claims to have acted, the court of equity may, in its discretion, either take cognizance of the question of the receiver's liability and determine it, or permit the aggrieved party to sue at law. But if the power of the court to make the order under which the receiver acted is disputed, then it has been held that the appointing court must assume exclusive jurisdiction, and inhibit the aggrieved person from seeking redress in any other tribunal. Klein v. Jewett, 26 N. J. Eq. 474.

receiver acts with caution, and for what, in his judgment, is for the best interest of the estate, and a loss occurs without any fault on his part, he will not ordinarily be liable for the loss.¹ Nor will a receiver be held liable where the loss occurs by reason of the fault of the parties in interest, and not of the receiver.²

b. LOSS OF MONEY DEPOSITED IN BANK. — Where a receiver uses reasonable care in the selection of a depository, in which he deposits money in his name as receiver, without any arrangement which limits or restricts his control over the fund, he will not, as a rule, be held liable for the loss thereof by reason of a failure of the bank.³ But if a receiver deposits receivership funds to his individual credit, or under some arrangement which limits his proper control over the fund, and a loss occurs, he will be personally liable therefor.⁴

Accountability to Successor. — But it has been held that where a particular receiver has been superseded for misconduct and neglect, and a successor appointed, the liability of the first receiver is to his successor and not to creditors. Clapp v. Clapp, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 7 N. Y. Supp. 495.

Sale of Greater Interest than Possessed. — So, also, a receiver who attempts to sell a greater interest in chattels than he can legally convey is liable personally for damages which may be sustained thereby by any person having an interest in such chattels.²

3. Torts of Employees — a. GENERAL RULE. — A receiver as such is not, upon principle and authority, personally liable for the torts of his employees.³ Nor will a receiver, in general, be held personally liable for the misappropriation of the funds of the trust estate by his clerks or employees.⁴ It is only when the receiver himself commits a wrong that he can be held personally liable.⁵ The proceedings against a receiver for an alleged tort by an employee is in the nature of a proceeding in rem, rendering only the property in his hands, as such, liable for compensation for such injuries.⁶ A receiver is not liable for torts committed prior to his appointment,⁷ nor can the property in his hands be subjected to such liability, except, of course, as the liability for such tort may be established as a claim against the individual or corporation over whose estate the receiver has been appointed.⁸

b. NEGLIGENCE OR MISCONDUCT OF ATTORNEYS. — Where a receiver used proper care in the selection of an attorney, he is not liable for a loss occurring through the attorney's misconduct.⁹

4. Contracts — a. IN GENERAL. — A receiver is, of course, liable upon any valid and authorized contract made in the course of his duties.¹⁰ The liability of a receiver upon contracts entered into in his official capacity is not, however, personal, but as a representative of the trust.¹¹ The enforcement of such contracts, or the payment of damages for their nonperformance, must fall primarily upon the property and fund in the hands of the court.¹² But a receiver has been held personally liable for contracts made by him without Discretionary Contracts. — Contracts made by a receiver, by virtue of a discretionary authority conferred upon him, are in some respects sui generis. They bind the receiver not personally, but as the representative of the trust, and are to be enforced, or redress for their breach accorded, out of the fund. Vanderbilt v. Central R. Co., 43 N. J. Eq. 669.

specific authority,¹ and likewise it has been held, upon contracts of personal employment.² But there may be no recovery against a receiver for services rendered by a mere volunteer.³ It has been held that a receiver may relieve himself from the personal liability due to lack of specific authority to contract by an express agreement with the party with whom he contracts, that such party shall look only to the estate over which the receiver is appointed.⁴

b. RENT OF PREMISES. — A receiver of an individual or corporation does not, by reason of his appointment, become liable on existing contracts of lease.⁵ Where, however, a receiver adopts an existing lease of premises, he becomes bound thereby to pay rent according to its terms.⁶ And an adoption may, though not necessarily so, be implied by a taking possession and occupancy of the premises under order of court,⁷ unless the understanding of the parties and the order of the court are to a different effect.⁸ But although there is no adoption of a lease, the receiver will be liable for a reasonable rent during his occupancy of leased premises.⁹

c. CONTRACTS PRIOR TO RECEIVERSHIP — (1) In General. — A receiver has the right, subject to the order of the court, to elect whether he will perform the executory contracts entered into by the individual or corporation whose estate he represents prior to the receivership.¹⁰ No pre-existing contracts are binding on the receiver unless adopted by him,¹¹ and it is the duty of the receiver to refuse to adopt a contract which would prove so burdensome as to imperil the fund.¹ But where an existing executory contract is for the benefit of the receivership, the receiver may, as a rule, adopt its provisions and bind thereby the assets in his hands.²

(2) Reasonable Time for Election.—A receiver is entitled to a reasonable time within which to determine whether it will be to the best interests of the estate to adopt executory contracts.³

d. PRESUMPTION OF KNOWLEDGE OF RECEIVER'S AUTHORITY.—A party who enters into a contract with a receiver is presumed to have knowledge of his authority to contract and its extent.⁴ But it has been held that where a contract has been completely performed by the other party, and performance accepted by the receiver, the consideration agreed upon will be ordered paid, though the court may deem the contract to have been injudicious, in the absence of fraud or collusion.⁵ If, however, the contract be unexecuted, it will not, if unauthorized and not for the benefit of the trust, be ordered performed by the court, or damages awarded, in the usual sense, for its nonperformance.⁶

5. Interest.—A receiver is not, as a mere matter of course, liable for interest on funds remaining in his hands.⁷ Nor is a receiver who has properly withheld payment of a claim until he could obtain the instructions of the court thereupon, personally liable for interest to the creditor.⁸ But interest will be allowed against the receiver where he has actually received interest in the receivership funds,⁹ or where he has used the fund himself,¹⁰ or has commingled it with his own,¹¹ or where he has failed in his duty to make investments whereby interest would have been received.¹ So, also, in some instances interest seems to have been allowed against a receiver as a punishment for his misconduct or neglect.²

6. Profits Earned upon Receivership Funds.—A receiver is accountable for interest and profits earned upon the trust funds in his hands. Where a receiver has used the funds in his own business, and made a profit thereon, he must account for the whole of the profit.³

7. Costs of Litigation.—A receiver is not personally liable for costs in actions prosecuted or defended by him except where he has been guilty of bad faith or gross mismanagement.⁴

8. When Liability Ends.—The general rule in this respect with reference to receivers has been stated to be, "with the termination of his official existence ends his official liability."⁵ And this rule has been held to apply not only as to contract creditors,⁶ though they may have no notice of the discharge of the receiver,⁷ but also as to claims for torts occasioned by the negligence of the receiver himself, or of his subordinates.⁸ But a receiver to whom land had been fraudulently conveyed was held liable after his accounts had been approved and he had been discharged, to be compelled to account in which it was held that in the absence of proof that the receiver used any part of the trust fund deposited in bank with his own funds, or in any way derived profit from them, he could not be charged with interest.

XIV. COMPENSATION OF RECEIVERS — 1. In General. — A person appointed receiver of the property of an individual or corporation is, as a rule, entitled to compensation for his services in preserving the property or conducting the business, if so authorized and directed.²

2. Amount or Rate of Compensation — a. WHERE REGULATED BY STATUTE. — In some jurisdictions the rate of compensation allowed to receivers is fixed by statute.³ Where a statute provides that receivers shall receive a certain commission on all funds received or disbursed, the statutory commission must be allowed, notwithstanding it may appear to be more than a reasonable compensation for the services rendered.⁴ So also, it has been held, the amount of a receiver's commissions is to be computed upon the entire fund in his hands, whatever may be the nature of the assets, and is not restricted to that part of the fund which is in the form of cash.⁵ A statute which authorized a certain percentage for receiving and disbursing the trust fund has been construed as allowing one-half the commission for receiving and the other half for disbursing the same.⁶ In some states it is provided by statute

Martin*, 14 Oregon 165; Price v. White, Bailey Eq. (S. Car.) 240.

An order ought not to be made directing a receiver to pay over the entire fund without authorizing him to deduct his commissions or in some way providing for their payment. Weston v. Watts, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 223; Galster v. Syracuse Sav. Bank, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 594.

But where the receiver of an insolvent corporation has no assets in his hands, it is not error to discharge him upon the application of those at whose instance he was appointed, without making the payment of his compensation and charges a condition precedent to the discharge. Joslyn v. Athens Coach, etc., Co., 43 Minn. 534.

Commissions on Sums Ascertained by Periodic Rests. — The courts have, in cases where receivers are allowed a commission or percentage upon the funds received, sometimes permitted them to make annual rests, and to charge their commissions upon the amounts thus ascertained. Under such circumstances, however, a receiver will not be allowed to make a new rest every time he makes a deposit in the bank, or to begin with full commissions from the date of such rest. *Bennett v. Property in Hand on Settlement of Suit. — The receiver is entitled also, in addition to percentages on money received and paid, to commissions on the value of all the assets, as book accounts and other things in action taken out of his hands and delivered to the parties by an order settling the suit. Bennett v. Chapin, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 675.

Funds Not Properly in Possession of Receiver. — To the effect that a receiver is not entitled to commissions on funds which were never properly in his hands as receiver, see Pittsfield Nat. Bank v. Bayne, 140 N. Y. 321.

6. One-half for Receiving, One-half for Disbursing. — Matter of Warren E. Smith Co., 31 N. Y. App. Div. 39; Howes v. Davis, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 71. And see that the compensation of receivers shall be left to the discretion of the courts.¹

b. IN ABSENCE OF STATUTE — (1) Rule as to Discretion of Court. — In the absence of statute regulating the amount of a receiver's compensation, the matter is one resting within the sound discretion of the appointing court.² And since the allowance to be made a receiver is within the discretion of the court appointing him, which has a fuller knowledge of all the facts upon which a proper amount depends, the appellate court will not disturb the action of the lower court unless the discretion vested in that tribunal has been manifestly abused.³

(2) Consideration of Particular Circumstances. — The amount which should be allowed a receiver as compensation depends much upon the particular circumstances of each case, the court having regard to the amount of labor involved, the character of the services rendered, the value of the property in controversy, and the practical benefits derived from the receiver's efforts and attention.⁴

The amount of a receiver's compensation is, it has been held, discretionary only in the sense that there are no fixed rules to determine the proper allowance, and it is not discretionary in the sense that the courts are at liberty to give more than a fair and reasonable compensation. *Central Trust Co. v. 3. When Compensation Paid. — A receiver is not, as a rule, obliged to wait for the whole of his compensation until the termination of his receivership, but may be paid at stated intervals during the continuance thereof.¹

4. Form in Which Compensation Allowed. — The compensation allowed a receiver may be in the form of a monthly or periodic salary,² a lump or gross sum,³ or in the form of commissions on receipts and disbursements.⁴ And where commissions are allowed, their amount is sometimes determined by analogy to the amount allowed by statute to guardians, trustees, executors, or administrators.⁵ This rule seems to have been laid down in New York in cases where the compensation is not regulated by statute.⁶

Money Paid into Court. — It has been held that a receiver has not, by virtue of his appointment, such a vested right to the collection of moneys payable to the estate as gives him the right to prevent persons indebted to the estate from paying the money directly into court, thereby saving to the estate the commission or poundage to which the receiver would be entitled if the money passed through his hands.⁷

Evidence as to Proper Compensation. — That a court should not award compensation to a receiver in the absence of evidence by which the proper amount can be determined, see Heffron v. Rice, 40 Ill. App. 244.

What Others Would Have Served For. — It has been held that what another competent person would have done the work for is not a proper standard for fixing the compensation of a receiver. Cowdrey v. Railroad Co., 1 Woods (U. S.) 334. And see Lichtenstein v. Dial, 68 Miss. 54. But see, as holding that in fixing the compensation of a receiver the court should determine from the evidence how much is usually paid to persons possessing the requisite capacity and experience, for like services and responsibilities under similar circumstances, *Geyser Min. Collection of Assigned Accounts. — Where, a few days before the filing of a bill by a member of a firm, asking for the dissolution thereof, and the appointment of a receiver, the firm assigned to a creditor certain of their book accounts, and the receiver afterwards appointed collected these assigned accounts, as well as other claims due the firm, the auditor to whom the receiver's account was referred, properly treated the entire amount in the hands of the receiver as the property of the firm, and allowed the receiver a commission on the accounts so collected. Kerlin v. Ewen, 149 Pa. St. 58.

Y.) 265. But this is only true, it seems, in the absence of proof as to the amount of labor performed by a receiver, Mulier v. Pondir, 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 472; otherwise the rule is not binding, and the court by whom a receiver is appointed has the right to determine the rate of his compensation, which may be fixed with reference to the circumstances of the case. Gardiner v. Tyler, 3 Keyes (N. Y.) 505, 2 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 247; Baldwin v. Eazler, 34 N. Y. Super. Ct. 274.

labor which he performs in connection with the receivership, and hence, as a rule, no additional allowance will be made.¹ But a receiver may be granted allowances beyond his regular compensation for any extraordinary trouble or expense he may have been put to in the performance of his duties,² as in prosecuting or defending any legal proceedings brought by or against him.³ But where the extra compensation is sought for services performed which were no part of the receiver's duty as such, it will not, of course, be allowed.⁴

6. Agreement to Serve Without Compensation. — Where a receiver consents to serve without salary or compensation, none should, as a rule, be allowed him.⁵

7. Resisting Allowance of Compensation. — It has been held that the allowance of compensation to a receiver cannot be resisted on the ground that the court had no power to appoint the receiver, that objection being a collateral attack on the order appointing him.⁶

8. Effect of Receiver's Negligence or Misconduct. — Where a receiver has been guilty of negligence or misconduct in the management of property committed to him, the court may reduce his compensation for such reason, or, if the circumstances warrant, deny him compensation altogether.⁷ But if the receiver has not been guilty of want of integrity or good faith, it has been held that mere want of foresight in regard to the future developments of business is no reason for denying him compensation or for reducing its amount, especially when the trust has been administered with a reasonable degree of success.⁸

9. Where Receiver Acts in Several Capacities. — As a general rule, a receiver will not be allowed additional compensation for acting in more than one capacity in the management or protection of the receivership assets.⁹ So, where a receiver has rendered legal services for which he seeks extra com-

Thus, a Master in Chancery acting as receiver is entitled only to the compensation of a receiver. Arthur v. Master in Equity, Harp. Eq. (S. Car.) 47. And see Wilkinson v. Washington Trust Co., (C. C. A.) 102 Fed. Rep. 28.

When a Trustee Is Appointed Receiver he should, it has been held, act without compensation. Banks v. Banks, 14 Jur. 659; Sykes v. Hastings, 11 Ves. Jr. 363.

As Agent of Mortgagee. — But where, by consent of all parties in interest the receiver of the debtor sold mortgaged property, as the agent of the mortgagee, it was held that the mortgagee should be allowed a sum to pay the receiver's commission, on the amount so sold for the mortgagee. Leadbetter v. Leadbetter, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 587, 11 N. Y. Supp. 228.

As Agent of Purchaser. — And where, pending foreclosure, third parties purchased the debt and mortgage from the mortgagee, the receiver assisting the vendees as their agent pensation, the courts have, as a rule, refused it.¹ But this has not been invariably the case. Some courts have allowed receivers who have attended in person to legal duties in connection with the receivership affairs, the regular fees paid to attorneys or counsel.² So, also, a receiver who had rendered legal services has been allowed, under special legislative act, compensation therefor in addition to his fees as a receiver.³

10. Where Order of Appointment Reversed. — A receiver who has been appointed in an orderly and legal manner by a court having jurisdiction, and who has in good faith entered upon his duties as such, should be protected by the court in his proper action under the order while it is in force, and be compensated and indemnified out of the fund intrusted to his guardianship for his reasonable services, legal charges, and disbursements, although the order of appointment is subsequently reversed for error.⁴ But it is otherwise, if it has been held, if the appointment of the receiver was wholly unauthorized and unwarranted.⁵

11. Where Improper Person Appointed. — Although, it has been held, a creditor or his representative should not be appointed receiver, nevertheless if such a person is appointed receiver and serves without objection being made, he may be allowed a reasonable compensation.⁶

12. Where Receiver Party in Interest. — It has been held that if a trustee or other party in interest, as, for example, a partner or mortgagee, offers himself as receiver, he may be required to serve without compensation.⁷

13. Successive Receivers. — A second receiver who is appointed to succeed a former one, and who receives the funds which were in the hands of the other, is not entitled to any commission thereon, when such commission has already been paid to the former receiver.⁸

14. Death of Co-receiver. — The death of a co-receiver does not, of course, defeat the claim of the survivor to compensation for his services rendered after the death of his colleague.⁹

15. Liability of Receivership Property. — The compensation of a receiver at their request, in bringing about the purchase, it was held that, in acting as the agent of the purchaser as stated, he did not violate his duties as such, so as to prevent his recovering from the purchaser compensation for the services rendered. De Jarnatt v. Peake, 123 Cal. 607.

Appointment Set Aside by Consent. — Where a receiver has been appointed in an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage, and there exists any irregularity in such appointment, if, on the application of the defendant to set aside the appointment, the court orders the receiver to be discharged, on condition that the defendant will execute a bond to pay the judgment and costs of the case, and the defendant voluntarily executes the bond and has restored from the receiver all of the property in controversy, such defendant cannot contest the legal costs of the receiver for any irregularity

So if, under the order of the court, the receiver has permitted the business to be principally conducted by the parties in interest, who have transacted the business as before the receivership, making purchases and sales and receiving and disbursing moneys, the receiver will not be allowed commissions upon their receipts and disbursements. In re Woven Tape Skirt Co., 85 N. Y. 506.

properly appointed is a charge upon the property or funds that pass through his hands.¹ Where, however, there has been an unauthorized appointment of a receiver for property in the possession of the defendant, which is subsequently set aside and the receiver ordered to restore the property, the receiver's fees and the expenses of the receivership should not be imposed on the defendant.²

16. Liability of Parties. — By agreement between the parties one of them alone may become responsible for the receiver's fees.³ And if the fund in court is insufficient to afford an adequate compensation, the party or parties at whose instance the receiver was appointed may, it has been held, be required to provide the means of payment.⁴ So, also, where a party unwarrantably and improperly obtains the appointment of a receiver, the party so procuring such appointment has been held liable to pay the entire expense of the receivership.⁵ However, the contrary view has been taken, viz., that, the receiver being an officer of the court, his compensation does not depend upon the result of the litigation, but will be paid out of the property in dispute, no matter to which of the parties to the action the possession of such property may be adjudged.⁶

XV. FOREIGN RECEIVERS — 1. Rule as to Extraterritorial Jurisdiction. — It is a rule of universal recognition that a receiver has not, as such, any extraterritorial jurisdiction.⁷ That is, a receiver being a mere creature of the Set-off by Purchaser Against Receiver. — It has been held that the fact that a receiver is authorized by order of court to retain the amount of his fees out of the proceeds of property sold, gives the receiver no specific right to any part of the fund until paid over by the receiver into court; and hence the purchaser cannot set off as against the purchase money debt a debt due him individually by the receiver. *Polk v. court of his appointment, he can manifestly have no greater or wider authority than the power which created him.¹ Nor has the statute of a state conferring certain exemptions upon receivers appointed by its courts any force or effect outside the boundaries of the particular state.²

2. Where Receiver Has Title as Individual. — Where a receiver has title to property by voluntary assignment, such title will be recognized in foreign jurisdictions.³ And where a receiver had recovered a judgment in a suit in the state of his appointment, he was held entitled to sue and recover upon it in a foreign state in his capacity as an individual.⁴

3. Statutory Receivers. — So, also, purely statutory receivers stand upon a different footing from ordinary receivers in chancery, and will, if the terms of the statute so require, be recognized in the courts of a sister state as assignees vested with legal title.⁵

4. Securing Possession. — Merely as a matter of comity the court of one state may extend its aid to the receiver of a foreign corporation, for the purpose of enabling him to secure possession of property which should, in equity, be applied in payment of the debts of the corporation. National Trust Co. v. Miller, 33 N. J. Eq. 155.

Where a Receiver of a Benevolent Association is appointed in the jurisdiction of its domicile, it is competent and proper for the court of another state, in which is a local branch of such association, to order trust funds held by such local branch to be paid into the hands of the receiver. Durward v. Jewett, 46 La. Ann. 559.

Right to Sue. — It is a rule of almost universal recognition that a receiver appointed in one state will be permitted, upon principles of comity, to bring an action in the courts of a sister state for the protection of the estate which he represents, when by so doing the rights of domestic citizens are not infringed or interfered with. Cooke v. Orange, 48 Conn. 401; Toronto Gen. Trust Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 123 N. Y. 37; Johnson v. Wallis, 112 N. Y. 230, 8 Am. St. Rep. 742; Matter of Waite, 99 N. Y. 433; *Runk v. Suits Against Foreign Receivers. — A citizen of one state may sue a receiver appointed by the courts of a foreign state, in the courts of the former, where the receiver is a citizen of and the cause of action arose in the state in which the suit is brought, and the suit is not for the purpose of controlling the receiver's official acts, or interfering with the trust property. *Le Fevre v. Receiver to Enforce Judgment. — But a receiver appointed on a creditor's bill to enforce a judgment of the courts of the state wherein the appointment is made, may hold the debtor's assets as against an attaching creditor who is a citizen of the same state, though the complainant in the creditor's bill was a citizen of another state.¹

Citizens of State of Receiver's Appointment. — The courts of a foreign state will not, however, by entertaining proceedings instituted by citizens of the state of the receiver's appointment, permit such persons in such manner to evade the effect of the appointment of the receiver by their own courts.²

Receiver Actually in Possession. — And the general rule is believed to be that where a foreign receiver is actually in possession of assets brought from the state of his appointment, or where he has once been in possession of the same, even citizens of the state into which such assets are brought must respect the right and title of the receiver.³

XVI. ANCILLARY RECEIVERS—1. General Rule as to Appointment. — Where a receiver has been appointed by the courts of one state, the court of another state may, when necessary or proper, appoint an ancillary receiver.⁴ It is, as a rule, within the discretion of the court of the latter jurisdiction whether to appoint an ancillary receiver, or an independent domestic receiver for the assets found within the domestic jurisdiction,⁵ as it is also discretionary whether, if an ancillary receiver is appointed, the court will appoint the person already appointed and acting as receiver in the foreign state, or some other person selected by the court.⁶

2. Powers and Duties. — An ancillary receiver, it has been held, is a mere common-law receiver, having only the powers conferred upon him by the order of his appointment;⁷ and the appointing court should give him the same remedies and aid in the collection of the assets that it would give to an original and principal receiver appointed by it.⁸ Where the same person has been appointed receiver by the courts of different jurisdictions, such person becomes, as to property within each respective jurisdiction, the officer of,

Application by Stockholder of Foreign Corporation. — A stockholder of a foreign corporation owning property in the domestic jurisdiction cannot, on the ground of a decree of dissolution and annulment of charter by the foreign government, apply for the appointment of a receiver by the domestic courts, where under such decree a stockholder would not be entitled to the appointment of a receiver in the foreign jurisdiction. *Hamilton v. and accountable to, and subject to the control of, the court of such jurisdiction.¹

3. Relation to General or Principal Receiver. — It has been held that receivers appointed for the same corporation in various states are all ancillary to the one first appointed, and should turn over to him the funds collected for proper distribution.²

XVII. CONFLICTING RECEIVERSHIPS — 1. General Rule. — As a general rule, more than one receiver will not be appointed over the same property in the same jurisdiction, or over other property of the same owner therein, except of course in the case of joint receivers, where all act together with the same object in view.³ Where a subsequent receivership is sought on account of other debts or claims of or against the same debtor, or with reference to the same or other property, the first receivership should be extended so as to include the subsequent debt or other property.⁴ More than one receiver may, however, be appointed where their functions do not conflict either by reason of the appointments being in different jurisdictions,⁵ or where they

2. Relation of Ancillary to Principal Receiver. — Bowman v. Harris, 95 Fed. Rep. 917; Smith v. Taggart, (C. C. A.) 87 Fed. Rep. 94; Fairmers' L. & T. Co. v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 72 Fed. But When Receivers' Certificates Have Been Authorized by the court appointing the ancillary receiver, it has been held that the foreign court of primary jurisdiction will remit to the former the matter of ordering the final payment of the certificates, and determine the compensation of the ancillary receiver. Doe v. Northwestern Coal, etc., Co., 78 Fed. Rep. 62.

3. General Rule as to Conflicting Receiverships. — Kelly v. Rutledge, 8 Ir. Eq. 228; Wise v. Ashe, 1 Ir. Eq. 210; Meier v. Kansas Pac. R. Co., 5 Dill. (U. S.) 477; *Lloyd v. Garfield Nat. Bank v. Bostwick, (N. Y. City Ct. Gen. T.) 14 N. Y. Supp. 919. And see Schulze v. Sizer, 14 N. Y. App. Div. 274.

In the Case of a Creditor's Suit, where more than one suit is pending against the debtor the receiver in the first suit may, if he consents, be appointed receiver in the other suits. Where the suits are all before the same chancellor or vice-chancellor he may, having jurisdiction over the receiver, compel him to accept the receivership in the second suit. Cagger v. Howard, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 368; Osborn v. Heyer, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 342.

Receiver in Voluntary Dissolution — Foreclosure of Mortgage. — Where a receiver of a corporation has been appointed in voluntary dissolution proceedings, and subsequent thereto a mortgagee of corporation property applies for a receiver thereof, the person already appointed should be appointed receiver under the mortgage, unless it appears that by such appointment the lien of the mortgage would not be adequately protected. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Hotel Brunswick Co., 12 N. Y. App. Div. 626, 42 N. Y. Supp. 350. But compare British Linen Co. v. South American, etc., Co., (1894) 1 Ch. 108, 7 Reports 64, in which a receiver was appointed at the instance of debenture holders to enforce their security upon particular assets, leaving the official receiver in winding up proceedings to be receiver of the rest of the assets.

Second Receiver Supersedes First. — Where, however, a different receiver is appointed, then, if the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and parties and is the same court which made the first appointment, the receiver in the first suit must deliver up the trust property to the receiver appointed in the second. State v. Jacksonville, etc., R. Co., 15 Fla. 270; Glines v. Binghamton Trust Co., 68 Hun (N. Y.) 511.

5. Receivership Pending Contest Between Rival Claimants to Office. — The fact that a receiver of a corporation has been appointed pending a contest between rival claimants for office does not prevent a trustee for the bondholders from applying, in a foreign jurisdiction, for a receiver to take charge of assets of the corporation there situated. Kelly v. Mitchell, 98 Ky. 218.

are appointed with separate and distinct rights, powers, and duties.¹ Thus, where a receiver has been appointed in an action to foreclose a second mortgage, another person may be appointed in an action to foreclose a first mortgage upon the same property.²

2. Priority of Appointment — a. GENERAL RULE. — In the case of conflicting applications for the appointment of a receiver, the general rule is that the court which first takes cognizance of the controversy and thus obtains jurisdiction will retain it to the end of the litigation,³ and, incidentally, is entitled to take the possession or assume the control of the subject-matter of the controversy, to the exclusion of all interference from other courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction.⁴ One court, therefore, has no power to appoint a receiver for property where a receiver has already been appointed therefor by another court of competent jurisdiction, who has taken possession of the property involved; or rather, a subsequently appointed receiver will not be allowed in any manner to interfere with the rights or possession of the first.⁵ The question of precedence in such case depends upon priority of appointment.⁶

b. INTERFERENCE WITH POSSESSION OF RECEIVER. — Another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction has no right to interfere with property in the hands of a receiver already appointed,⁷ nor to entertain complaint against such receiver, nor attempt to control or call him to account, or undertake to remove him.⁸

c. WHERE PREVIOUS APPOINTMENT WITHOUT JURISDICTION. — If, however, an order appointing a receiver is made without jurisdiction, such order presents no obstacle to the appointment of a receiver by a court having jurisdiction to appoint.¹

3. Functions of Second Receiver. — Where a receiver has been appointed pendente lite over property in controversy, and another receiver has already been appointed over the same property in another proceeding, the functions of the second receiver are subordinate to those of the first; and he is only entitled to the custody of the property after the first receivership has terminated;² or, as it has been otherwise expressed, a subsequent receiver takes only what is undisposed of by the court in the litigation in which the prior receiver was appointed.³

4. Conflict of Jurisdiction as Between State and Federal Courts. — If a federal court has first taken possession of property by its receiver, a state court will not attempt to oust or disturb such possession by the appointment of a receiver on its own account, and vice versa.⁴ A federal court will not, as a rule, interfere with the receiver of a state court by any process or judgment against him or the property under his control,⁵ and the rule is the same in Reformation of Notes. — Where notes have been executed by a receiver without authority, whereby the receiver individually had become bound, a court other than that in which the receiver was appointed has no jurisdiction to reform the notes so as to bind the receiver in his representative capacity only. Peoria Steam Marble Works v. Hickey, 110 Iowa 276.

An Injunction restraining the continuance of business by a corporation is operative against a receiver of the corporation subsequently appointed. Steel v. Gordon, 14 Wash. 521.

Decreeing Sale of Property. — And where, some months after the institution of foreclosure proceedings, a receiver was appointed in another suit instituted by persons who were substantially the defendants in the former action, it was held that the possession of the receiver in the latter suit would not prevent the court in the former action from decreeing a sale of the property. Bridgeport Electric, etc., Co. v. Meader, 72 Fed. Rep. 115.

Subsequent Receiver Subject to Prior Rights. — Where property is in the possession of a receiver appointed in an action pending in one court, it is under the jurisdiction of that court, which alone can determine all claims to it and direct as to its disposition, and an order of another court appointing a receiver of the same property is subject to this right. O'Mahoney v. Belmont, 62 N. Y. 133.

3. O'Mahoney v. Belmont, 62 N. Y. 133.

Express Provision in Order. — In Thau v. Bankers, etc., Tel. Co., 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. 588, 16 N. Y. St. Rep. 581, a receiver was appointed in a sequestration action against a corporation, although a receiver of the property of the corporation had been previously appointed in the Supreme Court. But the order appointing the second receiver expressly provided that there should be no interference with the first receiver in the exercise of his powers and the performance of his duties.

4. Federal and State Courts. — Mercantile Trust Co. v. Lamoille Valley R. Co., 16 Blatchf. (U. S.) 326; Union Trust Co. v. Rockford, etc., R. Co., 6 Biss. (U. S.) 198; Lancaster v. Asheville St. R. Co., 90 Fed. Rep. 129; Garner v. Southern Mut. Bldg., etc., Assoc., (C. C. A.) 84 Fed. Rep. 3; Central Trust Co. v. Chattanooga, etc., R. Co., 62 Fed. Rep. 579; Alden v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 5 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 231; Sanborn v. Gunter, 84 Tex. 273.

Subsequent Appointment by State Court. — Where, in a prior proceeding still pending, all the assets of a corporation had been sequestered and placed in the hands of a receiver appointed by a federal court for distribution, a so-called receiver subsequently appointed by a state court in proceedings by creditors against the corporation and its stockholders under a state statute for the purpose of enforcing liability of the stockholders is but a master in chancery appointed for the purposes of the litigation, and is vested with none of the rights or assets of the corporation. Hale v. Haddon, 89 Fed. Rep. 283.

Libel of Vessel After Appointment of Receiver. — It has been held that a vessel may be libeled to enforce a lien for repairs, though after the appointment of a receiver therefor by a state court, where the warrant was executed by the marshal before the receiver either took possession of the vessel or notified the master or any person on board of his claim. Roxbury v. Lotta, 65 Fed. Rep. 319.

5. Federal Court Will Not Interfere with Receiver of State Court. — Beecher v. Binger, 7 Blatchf. (U. S.) 170; Sedgwick v. Menck, 6 Blatchf. (U. S.) 156; Matter of Clark, 4 Ben.

state courts with reference to federal receivers.¹ And a state court will not attempt by a receivership to take possession of property held under process issuing out of a federal tribunal.²

Qualifications. — But a mere order by a state court restraining the officers of a corporation from using its funds for other than corporate purposes does not show such prior possession by the state court as will prevent the appointment of a receiver by a federal tribunal;³ nor is a federal court precluded from the appointment of a receiver by the pendency of foreclosure proceedings in a state court, where such suit is admittedly an amicable proceeding, and there is no immediate purpose of procuring the appointment of a receiver therein.⁴ And the rule is general in both the state and federal courts, that although a receiver has been appointed by the one court or the other, either may entertain a suit involving the same property, where the relief sought may be granted without interfering with the rights or possession of the receiver.⁵

XVIII. RECEIVER'S BONDS — 1. General Rule. — Although a receiver is an officer of the court and subject to its direction and control, he is nevertheless required by the court to give bond with approved sureties for the faithful execution of his trust. Accordingly the general rule is that before entering upon his duties, and particularly before taking possession of the receivership fund or property, the court will require a receiver appointed by it to enter into a bond or personal recognizance, with sufficient security, either to the clerk of the court or to the state, usually conditioned to faithfully perform the duties incident to the trust, and to obey such orders affecting the trust

A federal court will not entertain a suit by or against a receiver appointed by a state court which the state court would not authorize or permit. Porter v. Sabin, 149 U. S. 473.

A receiver will not, as a rule, be appointed by a federal court with a view to controversy with a receiver in a state court or with reference to proceedings in such tribunal. Wood v. Oregon Development Co., 55 Fed. Rep. 901.

In Some Instances Same Person Appointed Receiver by Both State and Federal Tribunals. — Taylor v. Life Assoc. of America, 3 Fed. Rep. 467.

1. State v. Miller, 54 Kan. 244.

A Judgment of a State Court declaring forfeit the charter of a corporation does not affect the rights of a receiver of such corporation previously appointed by the federal court. City Water Co. v. State, 88 Tex. 600.

Contempt of Court. — An attempt to disturb the possession of a receiver appointed by a federal court, by the institution of unauthorized proceedings in a state court, is a contempt of the former tribunal and punishable as such. De Visser v. Blackstone, 6 Blatchf. (U. S.) 236. But see in this connection, as construing the Act of 1887, Dillingham v. Russell, 73 Tex. 50.

After Technical Dismissal of Suit. — To the effect that after the technical but not necessarily final dismissal of a suit in the federal court, that court retains jurisdiction to such an extent that its jurisdiction is not superseded by a suit for a receiver in a state court, see Union Trust Co. v. Rockford, etc., R. Co., 6

Biss. (U. S.) 201. See Gaylord v. Ft. Wayne, etc., R. Co., 6 Biss. (U. S.) 290.

Property in Possession of Sheriff. — A receiver will not be appointed by a federal court for property in the possession of a sheriff under execution from a state court. Buckeye Engine Co. v. Donau Brewing Co., 47 Fed. Rep. 6.

Where State Levy Suspended. — But where a levy on property by process from a state court has been suspended by an affidavit of illegality and bond, a federal court does not exceed its jurisdiction by taking possession of the same property by its receiver. Georgia v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 3 Woods (U. S.) 434.

2. Thompson v. Van Vechten, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 620.

Mere Filing of Petition in Bankruptcy. — But it has been held that the mere filing of a petition in bankruptcy in the federal court will not oust the state court of jurisdiction to compel the transfer and delivery of the property of the bankrupt to a receiver appointed by such a judgment creditor. Watkins v. Pinkney, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 534. Compare Storm v. Waddell, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 502; Eisenmann v. Thill, 1 Cinc. Super. Ct. 191.

Premium on Bond. — It has been held that a receiver is entitled to credit for a reasonable amount paid a surety company for becoming surety on his bond.²

2. Not to Act Before Executing Bond. — Where the order of appointment requires the receiver to qualify by the execution of a prescribed bond, he should not, as a rule, do or perform any official act before complying with such provision.³ So, as the execution of the bond required by the order of appointment is essential to the receiver's title, a failure to execute the bond is ground for nonsuit in actions brought by the receiver;⁴ but a mere informality in the execution of the bond is no defense to an action brought by the receiver.⁵

3. Formal Requisites — a. IN GENERAL. — A receiver's bond should, in general, run to the people of the state or to the state, rather than to the plaintiff in the proceedings or to the clerk of the court.⁶ But, notwithstanding such an irregularity, the instrument may still be upheld as a common-law bond.⁷

b. NUMBER OF SURETIES. — Where the order required the receiver to execute a bond with sureties, it was held that at least two sureties were required.⁸ But although two or more sureties are usually required, the court may, in the absence of statute, dispense with two and require only one.⁹

c. WHO MAY BE SURETIES. — In England it has been held that sureties on a receiver's bond must be residents,¹⁰ and substantial persons.¹¹ But in the United States it has been held that such sureties may be nonresidents of the district or jurisdiction of the court appointing the receiver.¹² By statute in most of the states conditions with reference to the property qualifications of sureties on bonds are prescribed, which apply without exception to receivers' bonds.¹³

4. Liability on Bond — a. IN GENERAL. — A receiver and his sureties will be held liable on the receiver's official bond for any malfeasance or misfeasance in office whereby the estate sustains injury.¹⁴ And it has been held that where the appointment of a receiver is regular on its face, liability on the receiver's bond may be enforced although the proceedings in which the receiver was appointed are subsequently dismissed for want of jurisdiction.¹ But a receiver is not liable on his official bond for money which did not come into his hands as receiver.²

b. WHEN LIABILITY OF SURETIES BECOMES ABSOLUTE. — The bond or recognizance becomes absolute upon the failure of the receiver to duly perform his duties and account to the court.³ The regular course, however, it has been held, is to proceed against the receiver in the first instance by rule or order to render his account, and if he fail in the proper discharge of his duty within the scope of his bond, then to obtain leave of court to sue upon the bond.⁴ If, however, the receiver dies, so that it is impossible to pursue the ordinary course, the sureties may be proceeded against directly on the bond.⁵ But the sureties on a receiver's bond are not, as a rule, liable for any default or misconduct of the receiver prior to the execution of the bond.⁶

c. EXTENT OF SURETY'S LIABILITY. — The general rule in this connection is that the liability of a surety on a receiver's bond is determined by the terms of the bond.⁷ A surety, therefore, who has paid the full balance due by his receiver may protect himself by an injunction from having a judgment enforced against his recognizance for anything more.⁸

Liability for Interest. — It has been held that the liability of a receiver's surety for interest on the amount of the receiver's default rests largely in the discretion of the court, upon a consideration of all the facts and circumstances.⁹

5. Discharge of Sureties. — Sureties of a receiver will not, of course, be discharged merely upon their own request,¹⁰ nor will the discontinuance of a suit discharge a receiver therein or the sureties on his bond,¹¹ but the discontinuance of the suit will entitle the receiver to apply for his discharge and to have his account passed, so that he may pay over the balance, if any, in his hands, and exonerate himself and his sureties from further liability, unless the interests of the parties require that he should continue in the receivership to protect their rights.¹²

Funds in Hand Need Not Be Shown. — In a suit on a receiver's bond, it need not be shown that there are funds in the receiver's hands, if he has been ordered to pay and has been adjudged in contempt for not paying, where the bond is conditioned not only to faithfully discharge the duties of the trust, but also to pay and apply what he had or should receive, as he may from time to time be directed by the court. *Titus v. 6. Contribution Against Cosurety. — A surety who pays a debt of his receiver has the same rights against his cosureties that he has against the principal, and will be permitted to put the recognizance in suit as against the cosurety.¹

7. Reimbursement of Surety. — A surety who has been held liable on a receiver's bond is entitled to be reimbursed out of any balance of money in court reported to be due to the receiver.² Upon the same principle the share of a receiver in property which was being administered by the court was held liable to make good to the surety the amount paid by him for the receiver although it was not included in a mortgage which the receiver had given the surety as an indemnity.³ But a surety has no right to indemnify himself for his liability on the receiver's bond by obtaining from the receiver a portion of the estate in his keeping.⁴

8. Additional Security. — If the security becomes inadequate in consequence of the discovery of additional property of the debtor, or of a new acquisition of property by the receiver, the proper course is to require him to give further security. The court that appointed him will, upon the application of any party interested, compel him to do so, and, if he should not, will remove him and appoint another receiver.⁵ So, also, if in any other manner the security of a receiver becomes insufficient, the court may make a rule upon him to show cause why he should not give additional sureties, and, upon his failure to do so, may remove him and appoint another in his place.⁶

9. New Bond. — If a surety, during the continuance of a receivership, procures his discharge, the receiver must enter into a fresh recognizance with new sureties.⁷

10. Collateral Security. — While it has been held not regular to do so, and it is certainly not usual, receivers have been permitted to give collateral security for the faithful performance of their receivership duties.⁸

11. When Security Not Required. — The court may, in a proper case, dispense with the giving of security by a receiver,⁹ as where the parties, on their own authority, nominate a receiver and then apply for liberty for him to act without security.¹⁰ But a receiver will not be appointed without sureties, though not objected to, if persons not competent to consent are interested.¹¹

XIX. FILING AND ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS — 1. In General. — In some jurisdictions it is held to be the right of the receiver to pass, in the first instance, upon the validity and propriety of claims presented, subject to the control and direction of the court.¹² But the manner of asserting and filing claims in Effect of New Bond upon Liability on Old. — Where a receiver is required by the court, at the instance of a party to the case, to execute a new bond, though in the same penalty and conditioned as the old bond, the new bond will not operate to discharge the surety on the old bond from liability for future defaults of the receiver, unless there be circumstances to show that the second bond was intended as a substitute for, rather than as supplemental to, the first. Stewart v. Johnston, 87 Ga. 97.

2. Period for Filing Claims. — Where there is or is to be a fund in a receiver's hands for distribution, the court may decree that all claims, in order to participate therein, must be filed within a prescribed period of time, — a right which has not infrequently received express statutory sanction.³ But an order discharging the receiver of a corporation, restoring the property to the company and requiring all claims against the receiver to be presented to the court by a prescribed date, in default whereof they should be barred, does not, it has been held, preclude recovery in a subsequent suit at law against the company on a claim, not presented within the time stipulated, for personal injuries sustained during the receivership.⁴ In the absence of statute it has been held that a court has no power to provide that unless claims are filed within a period prescribed they shall be absolutely barred, since such a provision would be an infringement of the power to fix the limitation of actions.⁵

3. Interest. — Interest is not allowed on the claims against the estate of an insolvent in the hands of a receiver pending a stay of payment by order of court.⁶ Where, at all events, the receivership property has been sold subject to existing claims, a claimant will not be entitled to interest unless he shows that there were funds in the hands of the receiver applicable to the payment of his claim, which would not have been exhausted by the allowance of interest thereon.⁷

The Right to Share in Funds in the Hands of a Receiver has been held not barred by delay until after the institution of foreclosure proceedings in making claim for supplies furnished shortly before the receivership. New England R. Co. v. Carnegie Steel Co., (C. C. A.) 75 Fed. Rep. 54.

Effect of Allowance of Claim — Judgment Creditor of Claimant. — The allowance of a claim against a receiver has been held to create in the claimant a demand against the receiver, freed from the equities of such claimant's judgment creditors. Patterson v. Ward, 8 N. Dak. 87.

Judgment Creditor — Receiver under Mortgage. — It has been held that a judgment creditor is entitled to an order as against a receiver in foreclosure proceedings, subjecting funds in the hands of the receiver, but not covered by the mortgage, in part satisfaction of the judgment. California Title Ins., etc., Co. v. Consolidated Piedmont Cable Co., 117 Cal. 237.

Purchase Price of Claim. — A receiver of an insolvent has no right to refuse the allowance of a claim against the estate on a basis of its par value, for the mere reason that it was purchased by the present owner at a discount. Dimmick v. W. Fred Quimby Co., (N. J. 1898) 41 Atl. Rep. 101.

Foreign Judgments. — A judgment against a corporation over which a receiver has been person or corporation for which the receiver is appointed holds collateral security for his debt, or has even realized a part of the debt from collateral sources since the appointment of the receiver, does not reduce the amount upon which such creditor is entitled to receive dividends from the receiver until the whole debt is satisfied.¹

XX. PREFERENCES AND PRIORITIES — 1. Costs and Expenses of Receivership. — It is a general rule that fees and expenses of the administration of a receivership, and all incidental expenditures properly incurred or contracted for, take precedence of all claims against the property or its proceeds in the hands of the receiver.²

2. Taxes. — Taxes accruing on property in the hands of a receiver constitute a preferential claim upon receivership funds,³ only subordinate to the costs and expenses of the receivership.⁴

3. Liens, Mortgages, Etc. — a. IN GENERAL. — It has already been seen that a receiver takes property subject to all valid existing liens thereon and without displacing the order of their priority.⁵ Where, however, the receivership is at the instance of or for the benefit of lienholders, all proper charges, expenses, and disbursements incident to the receivership are a first charge on the funds coming into the hands of the receiver, prior to the existing liens upon the property.⁶

When Attached Property Is Taken into Possession of a Receiver, subject to the attachment, the receiver's possession is subordinate to the attachment lien, and such lien takes priority over the receiver's claim for compensation or disbursements; but if the lienor is a party to the proceedings, and the receiver takes into his possession the property of the lienor, as well as of the former owner, to protect it for all parties, the lienor's interest is chargeable with its due proportion of the expense of protecting the property or of changing it into money. Matter of Atlas Iron Constr. Co., 19 N. Y. App. Div. 415.

b. OPERATING EXPENSES. — Where a receiver is appointed to operate property for the benefit of the lienholders thereon, he may make the operating expenses a first charge upon not only the current earnings, but the corpus of the estate,¹ and in some instances courts have authorized a preference for operating expenses for a limited period prior to the receivership either on the ground that the lienholders were benefited by the maintenance of the enterprise as a going concern, or that the corporation owed a duty to the public to continue operations,² or as necessary, as a practical matter, to enable the receiver to continue operations without difficulty or interruption.³ But the right of a creditor of an insolvent corporation in the hands of a receiver to have a preference over bondholders under a first mortgage is to be regarded as strictissimi juris.⁴

c. DIVERSION OF INCOME. — Where there has been a diversion of the current income of property to the payment of interest on a debt secured by mortgage thereon, instead of applying such income to the payment of current expenses, claims for the latter have been sometimes allowed priority over the mortgage debt on this ground alone.⁵

d. CLAIMS PRIOR TO RECEIVERSHIP. — As a general rule, claims or demands accruing prior to the appointment of a receiver are not given a preference over pre-existing liens or mortgages.⁶ But the payment of claims classed as operating expenses incurred during a limited period prior to the receivership is sometimes allowed, as has already been seen.⁷

e. WAGES DUE LABORERS OR EMPLOYEES. — By statute in many states sums due laborers or employees at the time of the appointment of a receiver are made preferential claims on the assets of the receivership.⁸

4. Waiver of Priority. — The ordinary rule of priority of claims may, of course, be changed or modified by agreement and consent of parties.⁹ Where, however, persons entitled to a first lien on funds in the hands of a promise a claim to a corporation in the hands of a receiver and takes the notes of the corporation without an order of court authorizing such proceeding, he is not entitled to any priority. *Maxwell v. Wages Earned Before Passage of Act — Who Entitled. — Under a statute providing that when a receiver of a corporation is appointed, "the wages of the employees, operatives, and laborers" shall be preferred, it has been held that wages earned before the passage of the act were not entitled to the preference; that the superintendent and attorney of a corporation were not within the protection of the act, nor persons employing laborers for the purpose of manufacturing for the corporation, nor a person employed on a salary and commission to sell goods. *People v. receiver waive their right thereto in favor of subordinate claimants, they become common unsecured creditors of the estate.¹

5. Unlawful Preferences. — It is, of course, the receiver's duty to seek to prevent all unlawful preferences in the distribution of the funds in his hands.² The fact that claims not entitled to preference have been paid in advance of preferred claims, does not entitle a mortgagee to insist that the amount of such payments shall be deducted from the fund applicable to preferred claims ahead of his mortgage.³ Nor is a party who had a preferred claim on a fund which never came into the hands of a receiver thereby entitled to a preference on funds which do come into the possession of the receiver.⁴ So also, where a party failed to avail himself of an order of court directing a receiver to distribute the funds then on hand, he does not thereby obtain a lien upon the remaining assets for his pro rata share in such fund.⁵

XXI. RECEIVER'S CERTIFICATES — 1. In General. — A complete treatment of this subject will be given in another title.⁶ Only a general outline of the subject of receivers' certificates will here be given.

2. Power to Authorize. — While the courts have the power in proper cases to authorize receivers' certificates which shall be a paramount lien on the receivership assets, it has been held that the power should be exercised with caution, and never without notice to the parties in interest.⁷ As a general rule receivers' certificates are only authorized for purposes necessary to the preservation of the property, except by the consent of persons having valid existing liens thereon,⁸ and, indeed, the power of courts to authorize receivers' certificates, taking precedence of prior liens on the property, except for purposes of necessary preservation, has been expressly limited to receivers of railroads, except with the consent of the lienors.⁹

3. Compliance with Order Authorizing. — Receivers' certificates are, as a rule, valid only when in strict compliance with the order of court authorizing their issuance,¹⁰ and when issued for one or more of the purposes enumerated in the order.¹¹

4. Priority and Lien. — Receivers' certificates are, as a rule, made a first lien on the receivership property.¹² But it may be stated as a general rule that

9. International Trust Co. v. United Coal Co., 27 Colo. 246. And see also cases cited in preceding note.

10. Conditions Precedent. — It is sometimes made a condition precedent to the issuance of receivers' certificates that the proceeds or consideration thereof shall first come into the hands of the receiver. This requirement must be complied with. Alabama Iron, etc., R. Co. v. Anniston L. & T. Co., (C. C. A.) 57 Fed. Rep. 25.

Certificates in Excess of Amount Authorized. — Where certificates are issued in excess of the amount authorized, they will not be enforceable against the receivership property unless the proceeds of the certificates were used for the benefit of the property. *Wesson v. receivers' certificates will not be issued and given priority over existing liens, unless for debts entitled to preference under the doctrines discussed under the next preceding subdivision of this article.¹ And so receivers' certificates which are not given a priority by the order authorizing their issuance, over other claims, are not entitled to a preference over debts contracted by the receiver in carrying on the business pursuant to authority conferred upon him.²

XXII. SUITS BY AND AGAINST RECEIVERS—1. Leave to Receiver to Sue or Defend—a. IN GENERAL.—It has been seen that a receiver is generally empowered to institute all proper suits for the recovery of the assets properly coming into his custody and control,³ though the general rule is, subject to a few exceptions, that the receiver of an insolvent debtor cannot have or be made to possess any right of action not vested in the debtor.⁴ But in order to institute suits or defend actions, a receiver must have either general or special leave to sue or defend.⁵ General authority to sue is usually conferred Louisiana.—The rule stated in the text does not seem to prevail in Louisiana, where the receiver is held to have power to bring suits as incident to his general authority to get in the assets. Helme v. Littlejohn, 12 La. Ann. 298.

Distress for Rent.—To the effect that a receiver of real estate may, without leave, distress for rent in arrear short of a year, see Booth v. Clark, 17 How. (U. S.) 330 [citing Morris v. Blanchard, 19 Ill. 31.

by the order of appointment.¹ Or, if such authority is not given in the order of appointment it may be conferred by a subsequent order.² But where the suit contemplated is of a peculiar and unusual nature, such as is not an ordinary incident of the receivership, special leave of the court to sue should be obtained.³

b. RULE BY STATUTE.—When the receiver's authority is derived from statute his functions in regard to bringing actions depend, of course, upon the extent of the power conferred thereby, and must be determined with reference thereto.⁴

c. AUTHORITY TO SUE—HOW SHOWN.—The authority of a receiver to prosecute an action has been held sufficiently shown by evidence of his appointment, qualification, and general authority to sue, without showing the necessity of such appointment.⁵

d. SUITS IN FOREIGN JURISDICTIONS.—As will be seen more fully elsewhere, a receiver has not, as a rule, any extraterritorial jurisdiction, except such as may be accorded him under comity between states.⁶ It has been held, accordingly, that a receiver has no power to institute suits outside of the jurisdiction of the court of his appointment.⁷

2. Leave to Sue Receiver — a. GENERAL RULE.—The general rule is, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, that no action can be brought against a receiver without the leave of the appointing court.⁸ And this rule applies as well where the suit is brought to recover a money judgment merely, as where

Construction of Particular Statute.—Where a statute authorized the receiver to sue for all the estate, debts, and things in action, the latter term was construed as extending to all rights to personal property not in possession, which may be enforced by action and including trover. Gillet v. Fairchild, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 80.

Suits Without Leave — Maryland Statute.—In Everett v. State, 28 Md. 190, it was held that where receivers are in possession of property which is taken from them pending an appeal, and bond given, they have a right, on their appointment being affirmed, to sue on the bond without obtaining leave from the court.

it is to take from the receiver specific property whereof he is in possession by order of court.¹ Where suit is brought against a receiver in another court without the leave of the court of his appointment, the party instituting and prosecuting such unauthorized suit may be proceeded against for contempt.² So, also, injunction will lie to restrain an action brought against a receiver without leave,³ although the action is for a money demand and not for specific property in the receiver's possession.⁴ But a receiver may be sued personally and not as receiver, without leave of court;⁵ and a corporation which has subsequently passed into the hands of a receiver may be sued for claims existing against it before the receivership without the consent of the court which appointed the receiver.⁶

b. DISCRETION OF COURT AS TO LEAVE. — It rests in the discretion of the court to allow a party claiming rights against its receiver to bring an independent action against him or to compel such party to proceed in the action in which the receiver has been appointed.¹ Leave to sue a receiver is, however, granted by a court of chancery almost as of course unless it is clear that there is no foundation for the claim.²

c. EFFECT OF FAILURE TO OBTAIN LEAVE. — The failure to obtain leave to sue a receiver at law is not a jurisdictional omission, or a defense to the action, at least where there is no attempt to interfere with actual possession of property which the receiver holds under the order of the court of chancery.³ The plaintiff in such an action would only render himself liable to have his proceeding arrested by the appointing court in its discretion and in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction on the application of the receiver,⁴ by action directed against the litigant personally, and not the court in which the proceeding is pending.⁵ Failure to obtain leave of court before suing a receiver is, therefore, merely an irregularity which, though punishable as a contempt, may be cured or waived at any stage of the proceedings.⁶

The Rule in the United States Courts, however, is, where leave to sue is required, that it is a jurisdictional prerequisite, whether the action be for receivership property or a money demand merely, without which no court of law can entertain an action against a receiver.⁷

d. RULE BY STATUTE. — By statute in several states the rule requiring leave of court before the institution of a suit against a receiver has been changed or modified, and such statutes should of course be consulted. By Act of Congress it is provided that receivers of property appointed by any court of the United States may be sued in respect of any act or transaction done or performed in carrying on the business connected with such property without the previous leave of the court in which such receiver or manager was appointed; provided, however, that such suit shall be subject to the general equity jurisdiction of the court in which the receiver was appointed, so far as the same shall be necessary to the ends of justice.⁸ And this statute applies

May Allow Action to Proceed to Judgment. — When an action at law is brought against a receiver without applying for leave of court, the possession of the receiver is not necessarily a valid defense at law, and the court of chancery, if applied to for an injunction, may, in its discretion, allow the action to proceed to judgment and to be defended by the receiver. *Bryan v. to dispense with leave to sue a receiver appointed by a court as well where the action is brought in a state court as where the receiver is sued in a federal tribunal.¹

Effect of Judgment of State Court.—Where, accordingly, a receiver appointed in a federal court is sued in a state tribunal, a judgment so rendered, the state court having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, is final and conclusive.² The time and mode of the payment of such judgment by the receiver must, however, be controlled by the court appointing the receiver.³

e. RECEIVER'S DEFENSES.—In the matter of defenses to actions against him, a receiver stands upon the same footing as the party over whom he has been appointed. He may interpose the same defenses which such party might have pleaded, and, vice versa, no others are in general available.⁴

3. Enforcement of Judgment Against Receiver.—A judgment against a receiver cannot, in the absence of statute, be carried into effect except by consent and direction of the court which has charge of the estate.⁵ Nor does a statute which merely provides that actions against receivers may be instituted without leave of court authorize the execution of process on judgments recovered.⁶

XXIII. COLLATERAL ATTACK—1. Appointment of Receiver.—It is a rule of very general recognition that the appointment of a receiver is not subject to attack in a collateral proceeding.⁷ And the rule is the same although the bill on which the appointment was made is so irregular or imperfect as to require amendment,¹ or though the appointment of the receiver is in certain respects irregular or erroneous.²

But the Jurisdiction of the Appointing Court to appoint a receiver may be questioned in any action in which the appointment or the alleged receiver's title is involved,³ for in such case the appointment is an absolute nullity, and not voidable merely.⁴ So also where it was shown that the appointment of a receiver was unauthorized, obtained by collusion, and for the purpose of defrauding creditors, it was held that the appointment might be set aside in a collateral proceeding instituted for the purpose.⁵

from an order appointing a receiver, pending a determination of which a supersedeas is ordered or granted, the functions, powers, and duties of the receiver are thereby suspended.¹

XXV. TERMINATION OF RECEIVER'S FUNCTIONS — 1. Final Decree. — The functions of a receiver are, as a rule, terminated by a final decree in the cause, whereupon the receiver ceases longer to act in the capacity of receiver, but becomes a trustee as to the property in his possession for the person entitled thereto under the decree.² This rule applies, it has been held, though there is no formal order made discharging the receiver.³ The property, therefore, becomes liable in the hands of the receiver for the debts of the person entitled to it.⁴ But when a fund is in the hands of a receiver, his office as receiver is not functus officio until his liability as to the fund is determined, and his subsequent appointment by an insolvent court as permanent trustee for the party whose property he had sold as receiver does not release him from responsibility to the court of equity for the faithful discharge of his trust as receiver.⁵

2. Entry of Adverse Judgment. — It has been held that the entry of a judgment adverse to the party who procures the receiver's appointment terminates the duties or functions of a receiver, but does not wholly discharge him.⁶

3. Abatement of Action. — The mere abatement of the action does not of itself result in the determination of the receivership. A receiver's functions can only be determined by a formal order of court.⁷

4. Removal and Discharge — a. IN GENERAL. — The court which appoints a receiver has also power to remove or discharge him.⁸ Formerly it was the inflexible rule in chancery that the court alone which appointed a receiver had the power to remove or discharge him.⁹ But in the United States, where a cause in which a receiver has been appointed has been removed from the state to the federal courts, the power of removal and discharge of the receiver is vested in the latter tribunals.¹⁰

b. DISCRETION OF COURT. — It has been held that the removal or discharge of a receiver rests within the discretion of the court.¹¹ The discretion of the court referred to, however, is not an arbitrary or capricious discretion, but a lawful and reasonable discretion.¹ It has been held, accordingly, that the discharge of a receiver may, in a sense, be a matter of right, as where the primary object of the action was to foreclose a mortgage, the amount of which, together with interest, had been fixed by the court, and the mortgagor was ready and willing to pay such amount. In such circumstances the right of the mortgagor to pay such sum, and have the receiver discharged and the property restored, has been held to be absolute, and not subject to the discretion of the court.²

5. Causes for Removal—a. WHERE IMPROPER PERSON APPOINTED. — Where it is made to appear that an improper person has been appointed receiver, such receiver should be removed and a new appointment made.³

b. BIAS OR INTEREST. — Mere interest in the subject-matter of the litigation is no more a conclusive ground for the removal of a receiver than it is an absolute disqualification for his appointment.⁴ But where it develops that a receiver has an interest in the subject-matter in the suit in conflict with the impartial management of the property, he will be removed from his position.⁵

c. MISCONDUCT OR DERELICTION OF DUTY. — A receiver may be removed for such misconduct or misbehavior with reference to the trust as amounts to gross dereliction of duty.⁶ But if the removal of a receiver is sought on the ground of misconduct, he should not only have reasonable notice in writing, but also be served at the same time with a written statement, specifying the grounds on which his removal is sought, in order that he may have an opportunity to be heard.⁷

d. FAILURE TO ACCOUNT. — A receiver may be removed for dereliction of duty in the matter of passing his accounts.⁸

Receiver's Advance of Own Funds. — The mere fact that a receiver advances his own funds to redeem the receivership estate from a sale for taxes does not disqualify him for interest in the subject-matter. Roby v. Title Guarantee, etc., Co., 166 Ill. 336.

Action for Foreclosure. — Where, subsequent to the appointment of a second mortgagee as receiver in an action by the third mortgagee to foreclose, the second mortgagee institutes foreclosure on his own mortgage, a new receiver will be appointed for both actions on objection to the competency of the second mortgagee. Putnam v. McAllister, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 57 N. Y. Supp. 404.

8. Failing to Account. — Bertie v. Abingdon, 8 Beav. 53; In re St. George, 19 L. R. Ir. 566.

e. INSUFFICIENCY OF SECURITY. — Where a receiver's security became insufficient, it was held that he would be removed upon a failure to increase the amount thereof or give other sureties.¹

f. INCAPACITY TO PERFORM DUTIES. — A receiver will be removed where he has become physically incapacitated for the performance of his duties.² But where the duties of a receiver are not yet performed, he will not on his own application, assigning as reasons the pressure of other business engagements and consequent inability to give the affairs of the trust estate the attention they require, be excused from the performance of duties which he has voluntarily undertaken to perform.³

g. DISAGREEMENT OF JOINT RECEIVERS. — Where there was such disagreement between two joint receivers appointed to manage and operate property, as resulted in a conflict of policy and authority, embarrassments of the business, and an unnecessary duplication of expenses, it was held that both receivers should be removed and a single receiver appointed in their place.⁴ But mere disagreement over personal matters or "incompatibility of temper" is not ground for removal of joint receivers, where the differences and dissensions do not work injury to the estate.⁵

h. REMOVAL BY CONSENT. — It has been held that upon a bona fide consent of the parties to the litigation, the receiver and a person proposed to be appointed receiver, the existing receiver may be removed and a new receiver appointed; but a removal by consent will not be made where it appears to be an attempt to traffic in the office of receiver.⁶ Nor will one receiver be removed in order that another may be substituted, where the latter is the agent of private parties interested in the litigation.⁷

i. CONSOLIDATION OF RECEIVERSHIPS. — Where there are several receiverships covering an entire estate, all will be removed but one, whose authority will be extended over the whole.⁸ And where one receiver for a portion of a debtor's property has already been appointed, a different receiver for another portion of the estate will not be appointed on a subsequent application, but the receivership in the first suit will be extended over the second.⁹

j. INSUFFICIENT CAUSE FOR REMOVAL. — A receiver once appointed will not be removed for the sole reason of relationship to one of the parties.¹⁰ But if a relative of a party is guilty of favoritism or partisanship, he will be removed as receiver.¹¹ Nor is it alone a sufficient ground for removal that the receiver has employed, as counsel, the counsel of one of the parties to the action,¹² or that he has employed the defendant, a judgment debtor, as his assistant in making collections.¹³

6. When Receiver Will Be Discharged — a. NO FURTHER NECESSITY FOR RECEIVER. — It is a general rule that the receiver will be discharged where

12. Employing Counsel of One of the Parties. — Smith v. New York Consol. Stage Co., (C. Pl.) 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 419; Monroe Bank v. Schermerhorn, Clarke (N. Y.) 366.

In Hynes v. McDermott, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 104, it was said: "It is only when the receiver is acting adversely to one of the parties, that it has ever been supposed there was any impropriety in employing the counsel of the other."

Where the interests of the parties are in exact harmony there is no impropriety in employing the attorney of one of the parties. U. S. v. Church of Jesus Christ, 6 Utah 9.

there is no further necessity for the receivership.¹ So, also, there may be a discharge of the receiver as to a portion of an estate, where it is made to appear that it is unnecessary for the purposes of the receivership that it should be continued over all.² It has been held that where a receiver has been appointed, but no property has come into his hands and his appointment has been vacated, he is entitled to his discharge.³

b. INTEREST OF PARTIES. — Where it is for the interest of all concerned, the receiver will be discharged;⁴ and where a receiver has been appointed at the instance of a single creditor, the latter cannot, upon the satisfaction of his demand, have the receiver discharged as a matter of right, but the court will consider the interest of all concerned.⁵

c. DISMISSAL OF BILL — DISCONTINUANCE, ETC. — Where the bill or complaint upon which a receiver is appointed is dismissed for want of equity, the receiver may be discharged.⁶ But it is not necessary, in order to secure the discharge of a receiver, that the equities of the bill should be entirely negatived. If the court becomes satisfied that there is no reasonable necessity for a receiver, the appointment may be revoked.⁷ Nor does the dismissal of the bill or the discontinuance of the proceedings of itself operate to discharge the receiver, though as between the parties to the suit the receiver's functions are ended. He is still an officer of the court, whose possession is the possession of the court, and who may be required by the court to account to it for the funds and property in his hands.⁸ The discontinuance of the suit in which the receiver was appointed will, however, entitle him to apply for his discharge and to pass his accounts, so that he may pay over the balance, if any, in his hands, and exonerate himself and his sureties from further liability, unless the interests of the parties require that he should continue in the receivership to protect their rights.⁹

Where, with the consent of the management, a receiver of the property of a bank was appointed on the ground of insolvency owing to the peculiar character of the times, and an application was subsequently made for the discharge of the receiver on the ground that the bank had become solvent and that the rights of the creditors would be thereby subverted since their claims could be paid at once, it was held proper to discharge the receiver. *Ferry v. Abatement of Suit. — An abatement by the death of a coplaintiff is not cause for the discharge of a receiver who was appointed on process; but it would be otherwise if the cause had abated by the death of the defendant against whom the process issued. Woods v. Creaghe, 1 Hog. 174; McCosker v. Brady, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 329.

9. May Apply for Discharge on Discontinuance. — Murrough v. French, 2 Molloy 497; Largan

d. WHERE APPOINTMENT IRREGULAR OR IMPROPER. — Where the appointment of a receiver was irregular or improper or improvidently made, the receiver, upon such facts being made to appear, may be discharged.¹ But the appointment of a receiver in supplementary proceedings by a court of competent jurisdiction is not rendered void merely by a subsequent countermand of the execution upon which the proceeding was based.²

e. FRAUDULENT AND COLLUSIVE APPOINTMENT. — Where a receiver is appointed as a result of fraud and collusion between the parties, the receivership should be set aside so far as it affects the interests of creditors or third persons.³

f. WHERE PLAINTIFF NEGLECTS TO PROCEED. — Where the plaintiff neglects to proceed with the cause after obtaining the appointment of a receiver, the receiver will be discharged.⁴
